PREFACE

THE present volume forms the third instalment of those translations from the Greek poets on which, almost by an accident, I have spent no inconsiderable portion of the little leisure of my life. If now, contemplating that work dispassionately, I am moved by some misgiving and am tempted to consider it as being, however useful, σπουδῆς γε μέντοι τῆς ἐμῆς οὐκ ἄξιον, perhaps the same sober reflection occurs to most men in looking upon the finished labour of their hands : fecine operae pretium? Be that as it may, if it should occur to any, otherwise approving, to regret that I have selected for my purpose a series of poets who, after all, dwell rather on the lower levels of Parnassus, I am not altogether without hope that I may hereafter find time to do similar homage to some choicer spirits, to Aeschylus, for example, and to Pindar : for which last, indeed, what I have hitherto written was in a sense and in the first instance merely preparatory. But for the immediate future another sort of work suggests itself which cannot wisely be postponed and which one might, when too late, regret to have left unattempted. Vitae summa brevis spem nos vetat incohare longam. Even as I write, while the September sea breaks at my feet on the grey stones of Loch Ranza, not the least prominent thought in my mind is the moving memory of the vanished eyes—of Sir William Ridgeway, Sir John Sandys, J. S. Reid, Arthur Platt, J. S. Phillimore, to name but these, and of others nearer and unnamed—which would have looked upon these pages with a kindly interest, and, I would fain think, not wholly without approval :

ἔστι δὲ καὶ τι θανόντεσσιν μέρος
κὰν νόμον ἐρδομένων, κατακρύπτει δὲ οὐ κόνις
συγγόνων κεδνὰν χάριν.

Some little inconsistency in minor detail between one part of the book and another will be explained by the fact that Colluthus and Tryphiodorus—apart from the Index—were in type so long ago as 1921, while Oppian is only now completed.

This last, being largely pioneer work, has occupied more time and labour than one would have cared deliberately to contemplate. The identification of the animals mentioned, and of the fishes in particular, is a difficult and perilous task, and while I have done what I could by collation of the statements in ancient authors and by the use of such hints as could be derived from modern nomenclature or from the apparent etymological significance of the old names, I can hardly expect that my identifications, some of them novel, will command complete approval. But the statement of facts as here presented may lighten the labour of any future editor.

It only remains to thank all who have in sundry ways and at divers seasons helped me. Dr. Page, whose interest has been a great encouragement, has not only read my proofs with almost disconcerting vigilance, but has, in his capacity as one of the Editors, done perhaps some violence to his proper judgement in allowing me unusual space for explanatory or illustrative comment : superest ut nec me consilii nec illum paeniteat obsequii. Professor D'Arcy Thompson, ποτανὸς ἀπὸ πατρὸς, has given me kindly counsel and—φίλων ἔλεγχον ἀψευδέστατον—the loan of books, and, in addition, read and annotated the proofs of the Cynegetica : those of the Halieutica he was unhappily prevented by circumstances from reading. Conversations at various times with some of my colleagues, Sir Edward Sharpey-Schafer, Emeritus Professor Cossar Ewart, Professor Ashworth, and with my brothers, have been helpful. Dr. James Ritchie of the Royal Scottish Museum has generously placed his knowledge at my service, and in these last days, when I have been beyond the reach of books, Mr. P. H. Grimshaw of that institution has supplemented some gaps in my knowledge of Natural History from Eels to Whales. In the same circumstances, Mr. W. R. Cunningham, Librarian of Glasgow University, has at some personal trouble supplied me with information otherwise inaccessible. My colleagues of the Greek Department in Edinburgh University, Mr. J. A. FitzHerbert, now Professor of Classics in the University of Adelaide, and Mr. P. B. R. Forbes, have rendered me helpful services of the most varied kind—μάλιστα δέ τ' ἐκλυνον αὐτοί—and in particular have read the bulk of the proofs ; in which matter some assistance was given also by Mr. C. J. Fordyce, of Jesus College, Oxford, as by my eldest son, C. G. R., in connexion with the Colluthus and Tryphiodorus Index. Nor must I forget my nameless informants both among landward men and among them that go down to the sea in ships, τοῖσίν τε θαλάσσια ἔργα μέμηλεν, with whom, as occasion served, I have held illuminating converse.

Lastly, I would express my thanks, sincerely but briefly—for gratitude lies not in the much predication of it—to Mr. William Maxwell, Managing Director of Messrs. R. & R. Clark, to their accomplished Reader, and to the rest of their Staff, whose patience I have often tried, but never exhausted ; for indeed it seems to be inexhaustible.

TO OPPIAN, COLLUTHUS, TRYPHIODORUS

Farewell awhile ! who somewhile dwelt with me
In sunny days and sullen, good and ill,
Discoursing still your measured minstrelsy,
Legends of lowly daring, craft, and skill,
Lore of dead men which yet hath power to thrill
Spirits attuned to Nature's mystery,
Things secret of the everlasting hill
And precious things of the eternal sea.

In other mood ye sang of him who chose
For Beauty's Crown the Daughter of the Foam,
Mistook for gain what proved his bitter loss
And prelude to an Iliad of woes—
Won Helen from her happy Spartan home
And drenched with blood the soil of Ilios.

INTRODUCTION

I. THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE POEMS

THE authorship of the Cynegetica and the Halieutica presents a problem of some perplexity owing to the impossibility of reconciling some of the external evidence regarding Oppian with the internal evidence presented by the poems themselves.

I. EXTERNAL EVIDENCE.—This consists in the ancient Vitae (Bίοι) preserved in various mss. of the poems, with a short notice in Suidas, and some references to and quotations from the Halieutica—there are no references to or quotations from the Cynegetica—in later writers.

Vitae.—Of the ancient Lives, which show at once considerable agreement and considerable discrepancy, Anton. Westermann, in his ΒΙΟΓΡΑΦΟΙ, Brunsvigae, 1845, distinguishes two recensions, which we shall here denote as Vita A and Vita B respectively.

Vita A, “quae narrationem praebet omnium simplicissimam,” as printed by Westermann may be translated as follows:—

“Oppian the poet was the son of Agesilaus and Zenodotè, and his birthplace was Anazarbos in Cilicia. His father, a man of wealth and considered the foremost citizen of his native city, distinguished too for culture and living the life of a philosopher, trained his son on the same lines and educated him in the whole curriculum of education—music and geometry and especially grammar. When Oppian was about thirty years of age, the Roman Emperor Severus^a visited Anazarbos. And whereas it was the duty of all public men to meet the Emperor, Agesilaus as a philosopher and one who despised all vain-glory neglected to do so. The Emperor was angered and banished him to the island of Melite in the Adriatic. There the son accompanied his father and there he wrote these very notable poems. Coming to Rome in the time of Antoninus,^b son of Severus—Severus being already dead—he read his poetry and was bidden to ask anything he pleased. He asked and obtained the restoration of his father, and received further for each verse or line of his poetry a golden coin. Returning home with his father and a pestilence coming upon Anazarbos he soon after died. His fellow-citizens gave him a funeral and erected in his honour a splendid monument with the following inscription :

“ I, Oppian, won everlasting fame, but Fate’s envious thread carried me off and chilly Hades took me while still young—me the minstrel of sweet song. But had dread Envy allowed me to remain alive long, no man would have won such glory as I.”^c

“ He wrote also certain other poems and he lived for thirty years. He possessed much polish and smoothness coupled with conciseness and nobility—a most difficult combination. He is particularly successful in sententious sayings and similes."

Vita B, which is "referta interpolationibus," is given by Westermann in its most interpolated form. In the main it agrees with Vita A and we merely note the discrepancies, apart from those which are only verbal.

1. The birthplace of Oppian is first given as "either Anazarbos or Corycos" and afterward it is referred to as Corycos.

2. The Melite to which his father was banished is described as an island of Italy, whereas in Vita A it is said to be in the Adriatic. This points to a confusion of the Adriatic Meleda with Malta—both anciently Melite.

3. While Vita A describes the poetry written at Melite quite vaguely as τοιαῦτα τὰ ποιήματα ἀξιολογώτατα ὄντα, Vita B says, τὰ ποιήματα τὰ κάλλιστα ταῦτα ἐν ε' βιβλίοις [i.e. the Halieutica].

4. While Vita A says no more of his other writings than merely: ἔγραψε δὲ καὶ ἄλλα ποιήματά τινα, Vita B has; *συνέταξε δὲ καὶ ἄλλα ποιήματα θαυμαστὰ πᾶσι ὡν ἔτι, τά τε Ἰξεντικὰ καὶ Κυνηγετικά, ἐκάτερα ἐν ε' (sic) βιβλίοις παρὰ μέρος περιλαβών. ἐν τούτοις δὲ [sc. the Halieutica] μάλιστα διέπρεψεν, ἀτε δὴ περὶ τὴν ἀκμὴν τοῦ φρονεῖν γεγενημένος.*

Westermann prints also a Life of Oppian in στίχοι πολιτικοί by Constantinus Manasses which is merely a paraphrase of Vita A.

Lastly, we have the notice in Suidas s. 'Οππιανός. Κίλιξ ἀπὸ Κωρύκου πόλεως, γραμματικὸς καὶ ἐποποιός, γεγονὼς ἐπὶ Μάρκου Ἀντωνίνου βασιλέως. Ἀλιευτικὰ ἐν βιβλίοις ε', Κυνηγετικὰ ἐν βιβλίοις τέσσαροι, 'Ιξεντικὰ βιβλία β' (sc. ἔγραψεν). He adds a single sentence about his being rewarded by the Emperor —as he does not specify what Emperor, doubtless he means Marcus Antoninus as above.

Athenaeus 13 b (in a list of verse 'Αλιευτικά): καὶ τὸν ὀλίγῳ πρὸ δὲ οὐμῶν γενόμενον Ὀππιανὸν τὸν Κίλικα. The precise date of Athenaeus is not certainly known. Suidas has s. Ἀθήναιος Ναυκρατίτης γραμματικός, γεγονὼς ἐπὶ τῶν χρόνων Μάρκου. The contemptuous reference to the Emperor Commodus in Athen. 537 f τί οὖν θαυμαστὸν εἴ καὶ καθ' οὐμᾶς Κόμμιδος ὁ αὐτοκράτωρ ἐπὶ τῶν ὀχημάτων παρακείμενον εἶχεν τὸ Ἡράκλειον ρόπαλον ὑπεστρωμένης αὐτῷ λεοντῆς καὶ Ἡρακλῆς καλεῖσθαι ηθελεν suggests that the Deipnosophistae was not finished till after the death of Commodus (A.D. 193).

II. INTERNAL EVIDENCE.—Cynegetica. 1. The Cynegetica is dedicated to Caracalla (more correctly Caracallus), one of the two sons (the other being Geta) of L. Septimius Severus, Roman Emperor, A.D. 193–211, by his second wife, Julia Domna of Emesa in Syria: Cyn. i. 3 f. Ἄντωνινε | τὸν μεγάλη μεγάλῳ φιτύσατο Δόμνα Σεβήρῳ. Caracalla (this is only a nickname), born at Lyons in A.D. 188, was first called Bassianus. He was made Caesar in 196, Imperator under the name of M. Aurelius Antoninus in 197, and Augustus with tribunician power in 198. On the death of Severus at York in 211, his two sons shared the imperial throne till the murder of Geta in 212. The most natural date for the Cynegetica is after Caracalla became sole Emperor, i.e., after 212.

2. The poem is in any case dated after 198 by the allusion in i. 31 ἐφρασάμην Πάρθων τε δύας καὶ Κτησιφόωντα to the capture of Ctesiphon by Severus in that year, when Caracalla was but ten years of age.

3. The author of the poem belongs to Apamea on the Orontes in Syria, as is shown by Cyn. ii. 125 ff. where, speaking of the Orontes he writes :

INTRODUCTION

αὐτὸς δ' ἐν μεσάτοισιν ἐπαιγίζων πεδίοισιν, αἰὲν ἀεξόμενος καὶ τείχεος ἔγγὺς ὥδειών, χέρσον ὁμοῦ καὶ νῆσον,^a ἐμὴν πόλιν, ὕδατι χεύων and just below 156 f. (after mentioning the Syrian tomb of Memnon) he says :

ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν κατὰ κόσμον ἀείσομεν εύρεα κάλλη
πάτρης ἡμετέρης ἐρατῆ Πιμπληΐδι μολπῆ.

Haliœutica.—1. The author of the Haliœutica is a Cilician as is proved by two passages :

(a) H. iii. 7 ff.—

σοὶ δ' ἐμὲ τερπωλήν τε καὶ ὑμνητῆρ' ἀνέηκαν δαίμονες ἐν Κιλίκεσσιν ὑφ' Ἐρμαίοις ἀδύτοισι.

* χέρσον ὁμοῦ καὶ νῆσον = Xerapōnēsos, “quod versu dicere non est,” one of the names of Apamea or Pella on the Orontes. Cf. Steph. B. s. Ἀπάμεια, Συρίας πόλις, ἀπὸ Ἀπάμας, τῆς Σελεύκου μητρός ἐκλήθη καὶ Χερρόνησος, ἀπὸ τῆς περοχῆς τῶν ὑδάτων, καὶ Πέλλα, ἀπὸ τῆς ἐν Μακεδονίᾳ; Strabo 752 ἡ δ' Ἀπάμεια καὶ πόλιν ἔχει τὸ πλέον εὐερκῆ. λόφος γάρ ἐστιν ἐν πεδίῳ κοιλῷ τετειχισμένος καλῶς, διὸ ποιεῖ χερρονησίζοντα δ' Ὁρόντης καὶ λίμνη περικειμένη μεγάλη καὶ ἔλη πλατέα λειμῶνάς τε βουβότους καὶ ἵπποβότους διαχειμένους ὑπερβάλλοντας τὸ μέγεθος. OPPIAN

ὅσσοι θ' Ἐρμείαο πόλιν, ναυσίκλυτον ἄστυ
Κωρύκιον, ναίουσι καὶ ἀμφιρύτην Ἐλεοῦσαν.

These passages certainly suggest that the author of the Halieutica came from Corycus, but they by no means prove it. The poet is describing a method of fishing, and Anazarbos as an inland town (Ptolem. v. 8. 7 among inland [μεσόγειοι] towns in Cilicia is Καισάρεια πρὸς Ἀναζάρβῳ) would not be in point. Nor is Ἐρμεία, σὺ δέ μοι πατρώϊε conclusive, as Hermes appears on coins of other Cilician towns, e.g. Adana and Mallos.

2. The Halieutica is dedicated to a Roman Emperor, who is addressed as Antoninus^a (H. i. 3, etc.) without further specification.

3. That Emperor's son, whose name is not indicated, is several times in the poem coupled with his father: H. i. 66, the fish in a royal preserve are a ready spoil σοί τε, μάκαρ, καὶ παιδὶ μεγανχέῃ; i. 77 ff. σὺ δὲ ιθύνειας ἔκαστα, | πότνα Θεά, καὶ πατρὶ καὶ νιέι παμβασιλῆος | θυμήρη τάδε δῶρα τεῆς πόρσυνον ἀοιδῆς; ii. 41 σοί τε, μάκαρ σκηπτοῦχε, καὶ ἀγλαόπαιδι γενέθλη; ii. 682 Justice prevails among men ἐξ οὐ μοι κραίνουσι μέγαν θρόνον ἐμβεβαῶτες | ἀμφω θεσπέσιος τε πατὴρ καὶ φαῖδιμος ὅρπηξ; iv. 4 ff. ἀλλά σύ μοι, κάρτιστε πολιστούχων βασιλήων, | αὐτός τ', Ἀντωνῖνε, καὶ νιέος ἡγάθεον κῆρ, | πρόφρονες εἰσαῖοιτε κτλ.

Suidas, as we have seen above, puts the Cilician Oppian ἐπὶ Μάρκου Ἀντωνίνου βασιλέως, which most naturally means Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, Emperor 161–180, in which case the son will be L. Aurelius

^a The ambiguity is sufficiently great since the name Antoninus was borne by Antoninus Pius 138–161, M. Aurelius Antoninus 161–180, Commodus 180–192, Caracalla 211–217, Opellius 217–218, Elagabalus 218–222, etc.

INTRODUCTION

Commodus,^a son of Marcus Aurelius and Faustina, Emperor 180–192. Born in 161, he was made a Caesar in 166, and Imperator in 176. As H. ii. 682 ff. (quoted above) implies that the son was associated with his father in the imperial power, this would date the Halieutica between 176, and the death of Marcus Aurelius in 180. For the sporting proclivities of Commodus cf. Herodian i. 15. The schol. in most places, i. 66, i. 77, ii. 41, iv. 4 take the son to be Ἀντωνίνῳ (sic) τῷ Γορδιανῷ, but on ii. 683 the father and son are given as Ἀντωνῖνος καὶ Κώμοδος.

The identification of the Antoninus of the Halieutica with Marcus Aurelius has been generally accepted. The date thus assigned to the Cilician Oppian agrees admirably with the external evidence mentioned above. It agrees too with the date given for Oppian by Eusebius (Chron. ap. S. Hieron., vol. viii. p. 722, ed. Veron. 1736), and Syncellus (Chronogr. pp. 352 f., ed. Paris, 1652), who place Oppian in the year 171 or 173. If there be anything at all in the somewhat suspicious story of the banishment of the father and his restoration through his son, the story would appear to refer to the poet of the Cynegetica.

The latest edition (sixth) of W. von Christ's Geschichte der griechischen Literatur (ed. W. Schmid and O. Stählin) holds that the Cynegetica and the Halieutica, although by different authors, are both alike dedicated to Caracalla. von Christ himself held, as we hold, that the Halieutica was dedicated to Marcus Aurelius. The reasoning by which the latest editors reach their conclusion is nothing less than astounding :

^a His imperial name was Marcus Aurelius Commodus Antoninus.

(1) Assuming Vita A to be the most trustworthy, they take the banishment to refer to the father of the Cilician Oppian.

(2) They put the visit of Severus in 194, when he was marching against Pescennius Niger.

(3) The poet of the Halieutica, they say, died in the thirtieth year of his age, after the death of Severus in 211. But the Vita A—their sole authority—says that the poet was about thirty years of age when his father was banished, and that he died at the age of thirty. In any case the whole story seems to contemplate a short period of banishment. On the showing of Messrs. Schmid-Stählin it extended at least from 194–212, a period of eighteen years.

(4) Caracalla had no son. It was, apparently, only after his death that any hint was made with regard to the paternity of Elagabalus or his cousin ; in any case neither youth could possibly have been referred to in the terms in which the poet of the Halieutica refers to the son of Antoninus. Messrs. Schmid & Stählin, feeling this difficulty, comfortably say that in H. i. 66 “ist wohl πατρί statt παιδί zu schreiben.” It is regrettable that their researches in Oppian should not have proceeded a little further, when the other references to the son, as quoted above, would have needed more serious surgery.

Our conclusion, on the whole, is that the Halieutica alone is the work of the Cilician Oppian. The Cynegetica, which shows knowledge of the Halieutica not merely in detail, e.g. Cyn. i. 82 compared with Hal. iii. 35, but in general treatment, is the work of a Syrian imitator, dedicated very naturally to Caracalla, with regard to whom, amid so many uncertainties, nothing about his later years seems certain except his close relations with Syria.

II. ZOOLOGY BEFORE OPPIAN

The earliest classification of animals in any detail that we possess occurs in Book II. of the Περὶ Διαιτῆς, a treatise in the Corpus Hippocrateum, the collection of writings which pass under the name of Hippocrates. This particular treatise is assigned to the 5th century and has been by some ascribed to Herodicus of Selymbria, teacher of Hippocrates and father of Greek Medicine (cf. Suid. s. 'Ιπποκράτης, Soranus, Vit. Hippocr., Tzetz. Chil. viii. 155). This classification is purely incidental and is confined moreover to animals which are eaten. The author is discussing the qualities of the flesh of various edible animals (περὶ ζῷων τῶν ἐσθιομένων ὅδε χρὴ γινώσκειν) and he divides them according to their habitat, on land, in air, in water, into the three popular genera of Beasts—or as the writer calls them Quadrupeds (τετράποδα)—Birds (ὤρνιθες), Fish (ἰχθύες). Such grouping as there is within these great divisions is based on similarity in quality of flesh—distinguished as light or heavy, firm or flaccid, and so forth. Under the first genus he distinguishes Cattle, Goats, Swine (Wild and Tame), Sheep, Asses, Horses, Dogs, Deer, Hares, Foxes, Hedgehogs. Under the second genus he specifies φάσσα (Ringdove), περιστερά (Domestic Pigeon), Partridge, Cock, Turtle-dove, Goose; then ὅσα σπερμολογέει (no specific bird is mentioned but the reference would be first and foremost to the Rook, Corvus frugilegus, L., cf. A. 592 b 28, Aristoph. Av. 232, 579, etc.), and lastly “the Duck (νῆστρα) and others which live in marshes or in water.” Here we have traces of sub-groups based on habit or habitat. Under the third genus (Fishes) we have several such groups. He specifies (1) σκορπίος, δράκων, κόκκυξ, γλαῦκος, πέρκη, θρίστρα; (2) οἱ πετραιοὶ (rock-haunting fishes), of which he mentions κίχλη, φυκίς, ἐλεφιτίς (ἀλφηστής?), κωβιός; (3) οἱ πλανῆται^a (wandering fishes), no example being named; (4) νάρκαι καὶ ρῖναι καὶ ψῆσται καὶ ὅσα τοιαῦτα; (5) fishes which live in muddy and wet places—κέφαλοι, κεστραιοὶ, ἔγχέλνες καὶ οἱ λοιποὶ τοιοῦτοι; (6) fishes of River and Lake (οἱ ποτάμιοι καὶ λιμναῖοι); (7) πολύποδες καὶ σηπίαι καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα; (8) τὰ κουχύλια (i.e. Ostracoderms): πίνναι, πορφύραι, λεπάδες, κήρυκες, ὄστρεα, μύες, κτένες, τελλίναι, κνίδαι, ἔχινοι; (9) κάραβος, μύες (μαῖαι?), καρκίνοι (ποτάμιοι καὶ θαλάσσιοι)—i.e. Crustaceans.

This enumeration, as we have said, is introduced incidentally and there are indications that the writer was familiar with more detailed classifications. For example, he uses the term Selachian (τὰ σελάχεα), although he neither defines the group nor specifies the fishes which belong to it. Again, at the end of the list he makes a series of other distinctions such as Wild and Tame (these latter again being sub-

^a This should correspond to Aristotle's ρυάδες or πελάγιοι but there is a curious discrepancy as to the quality of their flesh: Περὶ Δ. οἱ δὲ πλανῆται καὶ κυματόπληγες . . . στερεωτέρην τὴν σάρκα ἔχουσιν, i.e. than οἱ πετραιοὶ, but A. 598 a 8 al σάρκες συνεστᾶσι μᾶλλον τῶν τοιούτων ἵχθύων [i.e. τῶν προσγέλων], τῶν δὲ πελαγίων ὑγραὶ εἰσὶ καὶ κεχυμέναι.

The real founder of scientific Zoology is Aristotle (385/4–322/1 B.C.), and for more than eighteen centuries writers on Natural History hardly did more than copy or translate his works or comment upon them. We know but little of his predecessors in this field, as Aristotle is not prone to base his statements upon authority. In his History of Animals (ai περὶ τὰ ζῷα ἱστορίαι) the writers referred to are Aeschylus,^a Alemaeon^b of Croton, Ctesias^c of Cnidus, Democritus,^d Diogenes^e of Apollonia, Herodorus^f of Heracleia, Herodotus,^g Homer,^h Musaeus,ⁱ Polybus^j son-in-law of Hippocrates, Simonides^k of Ceos, Syennesis^l of Cyprus. But in any case, so far as scientific Zoology is concerned, the opinion of Cuvier is probably not far from the truth: “Je ne pense pas au reste qu'il ait fait grand tort aux ichtyologistes qui l'ont précédé, s'il y en a eu avant lui; ceux des fragmens conservés par Athénée que l'on pourrait leur attribuer, n'annoncent point qu'ils aient traité leur sujet avec méthode ou avec étendue ; et tout nous fait croire que c'est sous la plume d'Aristote seulement que l'ichtyologie, comme toutes les autres branches de la zoologie, a pris pour la première fois la forme d'une véritable science" (Cuv. et Val. i. p. 16).

The chief writings of Aristotle upon Natural History are 1. History of Animals, in ten Books. In the best mss. there are only nine Books and Bk. x. is universally regarded as spurious. Doubt has also been cast upon Bk. ix., and even upon Bk. vii., which in the mss. follows Bk. ix. and was first put in its present place by Theodorus Gaza (15th cent.). 2. On the Parts of Animals ($\Pi\epsilon\rho\iota\zeta\omega\nu\muορίων$), four Books. 3. On the Generation of Animals ($\Pi\epsilon\rho\iota\zeta\omega\nu\gammaενέσεως$), five Books. 4. On the Locomotion of Animals, one Book.

With regard to the achievement of Aristotle in the field of Zoology we may conveniently quote—especially as a large part of his work is concerned with Ichthyology—the words of Cuvier in the Introduction to the Histoire Naturelle de Poissons: "Ce grand homme, secondé par un grand prince [Alexander the Great], rassembla de toute part des faits, et ils parurent dans ses ouvrages si nombreux et si nouveaux, que pendant plusieurs siècles ils excitèrent la défiance de la postérité. Les personnages d'Athènée se demandent [Athen. 352 d] où Aristote a pu apprendre tout ce qu'il raconte des mœurs des poissons, de leur propagation et des autres détails de leur histoire qui se passent dans les abysses les plus cachés de la mer. Athénée lui-même répond à cette question, puisqu'il nous dit [Athen. 398 ὄκτακόσια γὰρ εἰληφέναι τάλαντα παρ' Ἀλεξάνδρου τὸν Σταγιρίτην λόγος ἔχει εἰς τὴν περὶ τῶν ζῴων ἱστορίαν] qu'Aristote donna à Aristote, pour recueiller les matériaux de son histoire des animaux, des sommes qui montèrent à neuf [sic] cents talens, à quoi Pline [viii. 44] ajoute que le roi mit plusieurs milliers d'hommes à la disposition du philosophe, pour chasser, pêcher et observer tout ce qu'il désirait connaître.

“ Ce n'est pas ici le lieu d'exposer en détail le parti qu'Aristote tira de cette munificence, d'analyser ses nombreux ouvrages d'histoire naturelle, et d'énumérer l'immense quantité de faits et de lois qu'il est parvenu à constater; nous ne nous occuperons pas même de montrer avec quel génie il jeta les bases de l'anatomie comparée, et établit dans le règne animal, et dans plusieurs de ses classes, d'après leur organisation, une distribution à laquelle les âges suivans n'ont presque rien eu à changer. C'est uniquement comme ichtyologue que nous avons à le considérer, et dans cette branche même de la zoologie, n'eût-il traité que celle-là, on devrait encore le reconnaître comme un homme supérieur. Il a parfaitement connu la structure générale des poissons. . . . Quant aux espèces, Aristote en connaît et en nomme jusqu'à cent dix-sept, et il entre, sur leur manière de vivre, leurs voyages, leurs amitiés et leurs haines, les ruses qu'elles emploient, leurs amours, les époques de leur frai et de leur ponte et leur fécondité, la manière de les prendre, les temps où leur chair est meilleure, dans des détails que l'on serait aujourd'hui bien embarrassé, ou de contredire ou de confirmer, tant les modernes soient loin d'avoir observé les poissons comme ce grand naturaliste paraît l'avoir fait par lui-même ou par ses correspondants. Il faudrait passer plusieurs années dans les îles de l'Archipel, et y vivre avec les pêcheurs, pour être en état d'avoir une opinion à ce sujet" (Cuv. et Val. pp. 16 ff.).

Two examples may be quoted to illustrate the accurate observation either of Aristotle himself or of his informants: (1) the assertion (A. 538 a 20; 567 a 27) that the Erythrinos and the Channa (both belonging to the genus Serranus) are hermaphrodite, a fact rediscovered by Cavolini.^a (2) The assertion (A. 565 b 4) that in the Smooth Dog-fish, $\gamma\alpha\lambda\epsilon\delta\sigma$ ó $\lambda\epsilon\iota\sigma$, the embryo is attached to the uterus by a "yolk-sac placenta," rediscovered by Johannes Müller, "Ueber d. glatten Hai d. Aristoteles (Mustelus laevis)," Abh. d. Berlin. Akad. 1840.

As regards the classification of animals we can here notice only the main outlines of Aristotle's system. All animals are distributed into two groups: I. ἔναιμα, blooded animals [= Vertebrates]. II. ἄναιμα, bloodless animals [= Invertebrates].

Group I., ἔναιμα, is subdivided into:

- (a) ζωτοκοῦντα ἐν αὐτοῖς [= Mammals].
- (b) ὄρνιθες [Birds].
- (c) τετράποδα ἢ ἀπόδα ψωτοκοῦντα [Reptiles and Amphibia].
- (d) ἰχθύες [Fishes].

Group II., ἄναιμα, is subdivided into:

- (a) μαλάκια [Cephalopods].
- (b) μαλακόστρακα [Crustaceans].
- (c) ἔντομα [Insects, Arachnidae, Worms].
- (d) ὄστρακοδέρμα [Mussels, Sea-snails, Ascidia, Holothuria, Actinia, Sponges].

INTRODUCTION

Theophrastus of Eresos (circ. 372–287), the successor of Aristotle as head of the Peripatetic school, wrote Περὶ ζώων (Athen. 387 b), Περὶ τῶν δακέτων καὶ βλητικῶν (Athen. 314 c), Περὶ τῶν μεταβαλλόντων τὰς χρόας (Athen. 317 f), Περὶ τῶν φωλευόντων (Athen. 314 b, etc.), Περὶ τῶν ἐν τῷ ξηρῷ διαιτωμένων (Athen. 312 b: διατριβόντων 317 f), Περὶ τῶν κατὰ τόπους διαφορῶν (Athen. 317 f), which are known to us only by quotations.

Aristophanes of Byzantium (circ. 257–180 B.C.) made an Epitome of Aristotle's History of Animals, which was used by Aelian (circ. A.D. 200) and Suidas (circ. A.D. 950) and is perhaps identical with the pseudo-Aristotelian ζωικά (Athen. 319 d, etc.). This Epitome was extracted by Sopatros of Apameia (4th cent. A.D.), cf. Phot. Bibl. 104 b 26 ὁ δε ἐνδέκατος ἔχει τὴν συναγωγὴν . . . ἀλλὰ μὴν καὶ ἐκ τῶν Ἀριστοφάνους τοῦ γραμματικοῦ περὶ ζώων βιβλίου πρώτου καὶ δευτέρου. Extracts were also made from the Epitome for Constantine VII. (Porphyrogennetos), Emperor A.D. 912–959 [ed. Spuridion Lambros, Suppl. Aristot. I. Berlin 1885].

Clearchus of Soli (3rd cent. B.C.) wrote Περὶ ἐνύδρων (Athen. 332 b, cf. 317 c]. Nicander of Colophon (b. circ. 200 B.C.) wrote the extant Theriaca and Alexipharmacata, the former on the bites of venomous animals and their remedies, the latter on antidotes to poison. Tryphon of Alexandria (1st cent. B.C.) wrote Περὶ ζώων (Suid. s. Τρύφων, Athen. 324 f). Dorion (for whom see Athen. 337 b, M. Wellmann, Hermes 23 [1888]) wrote, in 1st cent. B.C., Περὶ ιχθύων, frequently cited by Athenaeus. Juba II., king of Mauretania, after the death of his father in 46 B.C., was brought a prisoner (Plut. Caes. 55 Ιόβας

One of the most erudite men of his time (Plut. Sert. 9 ἱστορικωτάτου βασιλέων; Athen. 83 b ἄνδρα πολυμαθέστατον; Plin. v. 16 studiorum claritate memorabilior etiam quam regno), he wrote on Assyria, Arabia, and Africa—his work on the latter supplying information on the Elephant (Plin. viii. 7, 14, 35; Plut. Mor. 972 b; Ael. ix. 58), the Lion (Ael. vii. 23), the Crocotta (Plin. viii. 107) etc., cf. M. Wellmann, Hermes 27 (1892) "Iuba eine Quelle d. Aelian" About the same date Metrodorus of Byzantium and his son Leonidas (Athen. 13 c, cf. M. Wellmann, Hermes 30 [1895] "Leonidas von Byzanz u. Demostratos") and Demostratus wrote on Fishes (Ael. N.A. epilog.). Alexander of Myndos (first half of 1st cent. A.D., cf. M. Wellmann, Hermes 26 [1891], 51 [1916]) wrote Περὶ ζώων (Athen. 392 c, Bk. II. being on Birds, περὶ πτηνῶν, Athen. 388 d etc.), based mainly on Aristophanes' Epitome of the H.A. of Aristotle, as well as a Θηριακός and a Θαυμασίων συναγωγή (Phot. Bibl. p. 145 b Bekker λέγει δὲ περὶ τε ζώων καὶ φυτῶν καὶ χωρῶν τινῶν καὶ ποταμῶν καὶ κρηνῶν καὶ βοτανῶν καὶ τῶν τοιούτων). He made use of Leonidas of Byzantium and Juba, and was one of the sources of Aelian, Dionysius De avibus, and Plut. De sollert. animalium. Pamphilos of Alexandria (middle of 1st cent. A.D.) was the author of a lexicon Περὶ γλωσσῶν ἡτοι λέξεων, in ninety-five books. This lexicon, which was at once a glossary and an encyclopaedia of general information, was excerpted in the reign of Hadrian first by Julius Vestinus and then by Diogenianus of Heracleia—the work of the latter being the basis of the extant lexicon of Hesychius. The zoological matter in Pamphilus was utilized by Aelian, Athenaeus, etc.; cf. M. Wellmann, Hermes 51 (1916). Plutarch of Chaeroneia (circ. A.D. 46–120) wrote De sollertia animalium (Πότερα τῶν ζώων φρονιμώτερα, τὰ χερσαῖα ἡ τὰ ἔννθροπα) and Bruta ratione uti (Περὶ τοῦ τὰ ἄλογα λόγῳ χρῆσθαι).

More or less contemporary with Oppian (i.e., the author of the Halieutica) was Julius Polydeuces (Pollux) of Naucratis in Egypt, whose extant 'Ονομαστικόν (ten books), dedicated to Commodus, Emperor 180–192, contains a good deal of zoological information. Somewhat later Claudius Aelianus of Praeneste (circ. A.D. 170–235) wrote De natura animalium (Περὶ ζώων) in seventeen books and Varia historia (Ποικίλη ὥστροπία) in fourteen books. Lastly we may mention here, although we know on his own authority that he was a little later than the author of the Halieutica (Athen. 13 b τὸν ὀλίγῳ πρὸ ἡμῶν γενόμενον Ὁππιανὸν τὸν Κίλικα), Athenaeus of Naucratis, whose Δειπνοσοφισταί, in fifteen books, contains an immense amount of undigested information. His zoological information is probably largely based on the Lexicon of Pamphilus and thus indirectly on Alexander of Myndos.

M. Wellmann, who has discussed the sources of Aelian, Oppian, etc., in a series of articles in Hermes (23 [1888], 26 [1891], 27 [1892], 30 [1895], 51 [1916]) regards Leonidas of Byzantium and Alexander of Myndos as the chief sources of the Halieutica. The close agreement in many passages of Aelian and Oppian he attributes to the use of common sources, not to direct borrowing of the one from the other.

Corresponding to the popular division of wild life according to habitat—creatures of the land, the water, the air—we find the art of capturing or killing wild creatures divided into Hunting, Fishing, Fowling. Xen. Hell. iv. 1. 15 ἐνθα καὶ τὰ βασίλεια ἦν Φαρναβάζῳ . . . καὶ θῆραι αἱ μὲν καὶ ἐν περιειργμένοις παραδείσοις, αἱ δὲ καὶ ἐν ἀναπεπταμένοις τόποις, πάγκαλαι. περιέρρει δὲ καὶ ποταμὸς παντοδαπῶν ἵχθύων πλήρης. ἦν δὲ καὶ τὰ πτηνὰ ἄφθονα τοῖς ὄρνιθεῦσαι δυναμένοις; Cic. De fin. ii. 8. 25 piscatu, aucupio, venatione; Plin. viii. 44 Alexandro Magno rege inflammato cupidine animalium naturas noscendi delegataque hac commentatione Aristoteli, summo in omni doctrina viro, aliquot millia hominum in totius Asiae Graeciaeque tractu parere iussa omnium quos venatus, aucupia, piscatusque alebant quibusque vivaria, armenta, alvearia, piscinae, aviaria in cura erant, ne quid usquam genitum ignoraretur ab eo. Pliny's alebant reminds us that the capture of wild creatures was at first a practical affair, the provision of food; cf. Pind. I. i. 47 μισθὸς γὰρ ἄλλοις ἄλλος ἐφ' ἔρμασιν ἀνθρώποις γλυκύς, | μηλοβότῃ τ' ἀρότῃ τ' ὄρνιχολόχῳ τε καὶ ὃν πόντος τρέφει. | γαστρὶ δὲ πᾶς τις ἀμύνων λιμὸν αἰανὴ τέταπι. And it may be noted that Izaak Walton, The Compleat Angler, c. i. makes each of his three disputants, Auceps, Venator, and Piscator, in commanding the rival claims of their different arts, refer to this practical aspect: Auceps: "the very birds of the air . . . are both so many and so useful and pleasant to mankind. . . . They both feed and refresh him; feed him with their choice bodies, and refresh him with their heavenly voices." Venator: "the Earth feeds man and all those several beasts that both feed him and afford him recreation." Piscator: "And it may be fit to remember that Moses appointed fish to be the chief diet for the best commonwealth that ever was." Later the three arts are regarded more as forms of healthy recreation or, in the case of Hunting, as useful preparation for the art of war: Xenoph. Cyn. 1. 18 ἐγὼ μὲν οὖν παραινῶ τοῖς νέοις μὴ καταφρονέειν κυνηγεσίων μηδὲ τῆς ἄλλης παιδείας· ἐκ τούτων γὰρ γίγνονται τὰ εἰς τὸν πόλεμον ἀγαθοί.

In the Greek Anthology we have a series of epigrams (A.P. vi. 11-16 and 179-187) in which three brothers, Damis, a Hunter, Pigres, a Fowler, Cleitor, a Fisher, make dedicatory offerings of the instruments of their several crafts.

1. Fowling (όρνιθευτική, ιξεντική, aucupium). The methods of the Fowler are alluded to C. i. 64 ff., H. i. 31 ff.; iv. 120 ff. (where see notes). The practice of Hawking is mentioned in Aristot. H.A. 620 a 32 ἐν δὲ Θράκη τῇ καλούμενῃ ποτὲ Κεδρειπόλει ἐν τῷ ἔλει θηρεύουσιν οἱ ἄνθρωποι τὰ ὄρνιθια κοινῇ μετὰ τῶν ἱεράκων· οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἔχοντες ἔνδια σοβοῦσι τὸν κάλαμον καὶ τὴν ὑλὴν ἵνα πέτωνται τὰ ὄρνιθια, οἱ δ' ἱέρακες ἄνωθεν ὑπερφαινόμενοι καταδιώκουσιν· ταῦτα δὲ φοβούμενα κάτω πέτονται πάλιν πρὸς τὴν γῆν· οἱ δ' ἄνθρωποι τύπτοντες τοῖς ἔνδιοις λαμβάνουσι, καὶ τῆς θήρας μεταδιδόσιν αὐτοῖς ῥίπτουσι γὰρ τῶν ὄρνιθων, οἱ δὲ ὑπολαμβάνουσιν. The same story is told A. Mirab. 841 b 15 ff., Antig. 28, Ael. ii. 42, Plin. x. 23. For a different method of employing the Hawk see Dionys. De av. iii. 5 and for the employment of the Owl (γλαῦξ, noctua) see Dionys. De av. iii. 17, Arist. H.A. 609 a 13 τῆς δὲ ἡμέρας καὶ τὰ ἄλλα ὄρνιθια τὴν γλαῦκα περιπέταται, ὁ καλεῖται θαυμάζειν, καὶ προσπετόμενα τίλλουσιν· διὸ οἱ ὄρνιθοθῆραι θηρεύουσιν αὐτῇ παντοδαπὰ ὄρνιθια; cf. 617 b 4. Cf. in general Xen. Cyrop. i. 6. 39 σὺ γὰρ ἐπὶ μὲν τὰς ὄρνιθας ἐν τῷ ἵσχυροτάτῳ χειμῶνι ἀνιστάμενος ἐπορεύουν νυκτός, καὶ πρὶν κινεῖσθαι τὰς ὄρνιθας ἐπεποίηντό σοι αἱ πάγαι αὐταῖς καὶ τὸ κεκινημένον χωρίον ἔξεικαστο τῷ ἀκινήτῳ ὄρνιθες δ' ἔξεπεταιδεντό σοι ὡς σοὶ μὲν τὰ συμφέροντα ὑπηρετεῖν, τὰς δὲ ὁμοφύλους ὄρνιθας ἔξαπατᾶν. Fowling furnishes Homer with a simile O. xxii. 468 ὡς δ' ὅταν ἡ κίχλαι τανυσίπτεροι ἦε πέλειαι | ἔρκε' ἐνιπλήξωσι, τά θ' ἔστηκῃ ἐνὶ θάμνῳ, | αὐλίν ἐσιέμεναι, στυγερὸς δ' ὑπεδέξατο κοῖτος, | ὡς αἱ γ' ἔξείης κεφαλὰς ἔχον, ἀμφὶ δὲ πάσαις | δειρῆσι βρόχοι ἥσαν. The Fowler's dedications in the A.P. vi. include νεφέλαι, ἰχνοπέδη, παγίς, κλωβιοί, στάλικες (stakes to support the nets), limed reeds, ἐπισπαστήρ (= ἐπίδρομος of the Hunter's net), and a net or noose for catching cranes by the neck (ἄρκυν τε κλαγερῶν λαιμοπέδαν γεράνων, cf. δεράγχη A.P. vi. 109).

Of ancient writings on Fowling we possess, in addition to some fragments of the De aucupio of Nemesianus (A.D. 3rd cent.), a prose paraphrase by Euteenius of a lost poem—sometimes supposed to be the 'Ιξεντικά ascribed to Oppian (Suid. s. 'Οππιανός), but now generally attributed to Dionysius the Periegete (in time of Hadrian). We quote it as Dionys. De av. i.e. Διονυσίου περὶ ὄρνιθων (Cramer Anec. Par. i. 22 f.). The treatise (3 Bks.) reminds one of the Oppianic manner. Thus Bk. III. begins, like our Cynegetica and Halieutica, with a comparison of Hunting, Fishing, and Fowling. While the business of the first two is hazardous, "it suffices the Fowlers to wander with delight in plain and grove and meadow and to hearken to the sweet singing of the birds, using neither sword nor club nor spear, nor employing nets and dogs, but carrying only birdlime and reeds, and fine lines and lightest creels (κύρτους, traps, cages) under the arm. Sometimes too they dress a tree with branches not its own and bring tame birds to share the hunt." Fowling methods are summarized thus: ἰξῷ χρωμένοις ἡ θριξὶν ἵππείαις ἡ λίνοις ἡ πάγαις ἡ καὶ πηκτίσιν ἡ τροφῆ δελεάζοντιν ἡ τὸν σύμφυλον ὄρνιν ἐπιδεικνῦσιν. Pliny x. deals with Birds. There are nine lines on Fowling (Paulini Nolani carmen de aucupio) in Poet. Lat. Minores, ed. N. E. Lemaire, Paris, 1824, vol. i.

2. Hunting (κυνηγέσιον, κυνηγετική, venatio). On Hunting we possess the Cynegeticus of Xenophon (c. 430—c. 354 B.C.) and the supplementary Cynegeticus of Arrian (c. A.D. 150), and in Latin the Cynegetica of Grattius (contemporary of Ovid, cf. Ep. ex Pont. iv. 16. 34 aptaque venanti Grattius arma daret) in 541 hexameters, and the Cynegetica of Nemesianus (A.D. 3rd cent.). Much useful information is to be found in the Onomasticon of Pollux (circ. A.D. 166 dedicated to Commodus), especially v. 1-94, which is practically a systematic treatise on the subject; in the περὶ Ζώων of Aelian (in time of Septimius Severus); and in the Natural History of Pliny (A.D. 23-79), especially Bk. viii., as well as in the Res rusticae of Varro (116-27 B.C.), the De re rustica of Columella (A.D. 1st cent.), and Palladius (A.D. iv. cent.). Merely incidental references are often instructive, e.g. Xen. Cyr. i. 6. 40 "Against the Hare, again, because he feeds in the night and hides by day, you reared dogs which should find him by scent. And because, when found, he fled swiftly, you had other dogs fitted to take him by speed of foot. If again, he escaped these also, you would learn his roads and the sort of places that he is caught fleeing to, and in these you would spread nets difficult to see and the Hare in his impetuous flight would fall into them and entangle himself. And, to prevent him from escaping even from these, you set watchers of what happened (i.e. ἀρκυωροί Xen. Cyn. 6. 5), who from close at hand might quickly be on the spot; and you behind shouting close upon the Hare frightened him so that he was foolishly taken, while, by instructing those in front to be silent, you caused their ambush not to be perceived." See also "Joannis Caii Britanni De canibus Britannicis" and "Hier. Fracastorii Alcon sive De cura canum Venaticorum" in Lemaire, op. cit. vol. i. pp. 147 ff. The work of Dr. Caius—founder of Caius College, Cambridge—is addressed to Gesner.

3. Fishing (ἀλιευτική, piscatus). We possess a fragment—some 132 hexameters—of the Halieutica of Ovid (cf. Plin. xxxii. 152 his adiciemus ab Ovidio posita nomina quae apud neminem alium reperiuntur, sed fortassis in Ponto nascentium, ubi id volumen supremis suis temporibus inchoavit: bovem, cercurum in scopolis viventem, orphum rubentemque erythinum, iulum, pictas mormyras aureique coloris chrysophrym, praeterea sparum, tragum, et placentem cauda melanurum, epodas lati generis. Praeterea haec insignia piscium tradit: channen ex se ipsa concipere, glaucum aestate nunquam apparere, pompilum qui semper comitetur navium cursus, chromum qui nidificet in aquis. Helopem dicit nostris incognitum undis, ex quo apparet falli eos qui eundem acipenserem existimaverint. Helopi palmam saporis inter pisces multi dedere), the genuineness of which has been wrongly suspected. But for the most part we must depend on general works, such as Aristot. H.A., Ael. N.A., Pliny (especially ix. and xxxii.) and other works mentioned in the previous section (Hunting).

In Plato's Sophist 219 sq., Socrates, wishing to define a sophist and considering that the sophist is a γένος χαλεπὸν καὶ δυσθήρευτον, proposes to practise definition on an easier subject, and he selects the Angler (ἀσπαλιευτής) as "known to everyone and not a person to be taken very seriously." He proceeds as follows :

Angling is an Art and of the two kinds of Art—Creative and Acquisitive—it belongs to the latter. Again the Acquisitive is of two kinds—that which proceeds by voluntary Exchange and that which proceeds by Force—and Angling belongs to the latter. Force may be open, i.e. Fighting, or secret, i.e. Hunting. Hunting again is of the Lifeless—this sort of Hunting has "no special name except some sorts of diving" (Plato no doubt means σπογγοθηρική [sponge-cutting, Poll. vii. 139 or the like])—or of the Living, i.e. Animal Hunting. This again is divided into Hunting of Land Animals and Hunting of Water Animals (Animals which swim). Water animals may be Winged, i.e. Birds, and the hunting of these is called Fowling, or they may live in the water, and the hunting of these is called Fishing. Of Fishing there are two kinds, that which proceeds by Enclosures (ἐρκη)—i.e. κύρται, δίκτυα, βρόχοι, πόρκοι, and the like—and that which proceeds by Striking (πληγή), i.e. by Hooks (ἄγκιστρα) and Tridents (τριόδοντες). This again is divided into (1) Night-fishing, done by the light of a fire and called by fishermen πυρευτική; (2) Day-fishing, which may be called as a whole ἀγκιστρευτική, ὡς ἔχόντων ἐν ἄκροις ἄγκιστρα καὶ τῶν τριοδόντων, but is further divided into (1) τριοδοντία or Spearing, in which the blow is downward and the fish is struck in any part of the body; (2) ἀσπαλιευτική or Angling, where the fish is hooked about the head or mouth and drawn upwards from below by rods or reeds (ῥάβδοις καὶ καλάμοις ἀσπάμενον); cf. Plato, Laws, 823.

Oppian, H. iii. 72 ff., distinguishes four methods of Fishing—by Hook and Line, Nets, Weels, Trident.

With regard to the Hook and Line he distinguishes Rod-fishing from fishing without a Rod, i.e. with hand-lines, and in the case of the latter method he distinguishes two sorts of line—the κάθετος, or leaded line (see H. iii. 77 n.) and the πολυάγκιστρον, or line with many hooks, for which cf. A. 621 a 15 ἀλίσκονται (sc. αἱ ἀλώπεκες, Fox Sharks) περὶ ἐνίοις τόποις πολυάγκιστροις; 532 b 25 a certain monstrous sea creature is said λαβέσθαι ποτὲ τοῦ πολυαγκίστρου τῷ ἄκρῳ αὐτοῦ, i.e. to have seized a night-line with its extremity. Apost. p. 47 is disposed to identify the πολυάγκιστρον with a species of lines used in Greece to-day especially for catching Ἐρυθρίνια (Sea-breams) but also for other fishes. These lines are called παραγάδια, presumably from being mainly used near the land (παρὰ γῆν, παραγάδι). It is a species of line, he says, well known in the N. of France and on all the coasts of England, where it is used for catching Congers and Rays. It consists of a very long and strong line, which, to protect it from the action of the salt water, is dyed red by dipping in an infusion of oak-bark and which carries a large number of hooks attached at intervals by short lines of finer quality (παράμωλα). This sort of line is employed at night. One end is anchored, while to the other end a piece of cork or the like is attached to indicate its position. On dark nights, in place of a cork, a triangle is attached, made of wood of the elder-tree, surmounted by a bell, which rings as it is swayed by the waves and so guides the fisherman to the spot. When this engine is withdrawn from the sea, the lines are arranged in a basket, the sides of which are furnished with pieces of cork into which the hooks are stuck. At Paxo, near Corfu, these lines are arranged in such a way that they float and small sails are attached which, driven by the wind, set the whole apparatus in motion.

With regard to Nets the different sorts mentioned by Oppian are not easy to identify with certainty.

1. δίκτυον is generic for every sort of Net.

2. ἀμφίβληστρον is usually taken to be a “casting-net,” which is supported by Hesiod, Sc. 213 f. αὐτὰρ ἐπ’ ἀκταῖς | ἥστο ἀνὴρ ἀλιεὺς δεδοκημένος εἰχε δὲ χερσὸν | ἵχθύσιν ἀμφίβληστρον ἀπορρίψοντι ἔοικώς, although Theocritus i. 44 in a parallel passage has μέγα δίκτυον ἐς βόλον ἔλκει. This sense suits Aesch. Ag. 1382, where Clytemnestra, describing how she enveloped Agamemnon in a bath-robe, says: ἀμφίβληστρον | ὥσπερ ἵχθύων περιστιχίζω, πλοῦτον εἵματος κακόν. Cf. Aesch. Ch. 492; Herod. i. 141; ii. 95. Pollux i. 97 mentions together δίκτυα, ἀμφίβληστρα, γρῖφοι, πάναγρον λίνον, and so x. 132 where he adds γάγγαμον. Plut. Mor. 977 F οἱ δὲ ἀλιεῖς συνορῶντες . . . τὰ πλεῖστα διακρονόμενα τὰς ἀπ’ ἀγκίστρον βολὰς

ἐπὶ βίας ἐτράπησαν, καθάπερ οἱ Πέρσαι σαγηνεύοντες (Herod. iii. 149, vi. 31), ώς τοῖς ἐνσχεθεῖσιν ἐκ λογισμοῦ καὶ σοφίας διάφευξιν οὖσαν. ἀμφιβλήστροις μὲν γὰρ καὶ ὑποχαῖς κευτρεῖς καὶ ιουλίδες ἀλίσκονται, μόρμυροί τε καὶ σαργοὶ καὶ κωβιοὶ καὶ λάβρακες· τὰ δὲ βολιστικὰ καλούμενα, τρίγλα καὶ χρυσωπὸν καὶ σκορπίον, γρίποις [i.q. γρίφοις] τε καὶ σαγήναις σύρουσι περιλαμβάνοντες· τῶν δικτύων οὖν τὸ γένος ὄρθως "Ομηρος πάναγρον προσεῖπεν (Il. v. 487). The primary meaning of "casting-net" seems pretty well established, but it could easily be extended to any sort of Net (Aesch. P.V. 81 of the chains of Prometheus, Soph. Ant. 343 φῦλον ὄρνιθων ἀμφιβαλὸν ἄγει σπείραιοι δικτυοκλώστοις). In the N.T. Matth. iv. 18 and John xxi. some difficulties are raised which cannot be discussed here. Usually a "casting-net" is understood to be a Net cast by a single person and immediately withdrawn. It is thus the πεξόβολος of modern Greece: Apost. p. 38 "Le πεξόβολος, épervier, est un filet qu'on jette de terre en entrant parfois dans l'eau jusqu'aux genoux. On le tire à la hâte et aussitôt après l'avoir lancé pour ne pas laisser aux poissons avant qu'il ne se renferme le temps de s'échapper entre les mailles et le fond de la mer. Cet engin est, croyons-nous, celui qu'Oppian décrit dans ses 'Αλιευτικά sous le nom de σφαιρών [see below]. La forme même de l'engin autorise cette supposition. Il faut une grande adresse pour se servir de cet filet. Le pêcheur doit le lancer de manière à ce qu'il tombe tout ouvert sur le banc des poissons qu'il a aperçu du rivage."

Those nets which are withdrawn a few moments after being cast are called in M. G. Nets ἀπὸ βολῆς (at Paros ἡμεροβόλια), or ἀφρόδυκτα i.e. foam-nets, being designed to catch surface fishes, ἀφρόψαρα, fishes which swim between two waters, such as Mackerel, Horse-Mackerel, etc. Nets, on the other hand, which are shot in the morning and drawn next morning are called ἀπὸ στατοῦ, and are generally "compound," μανώμενα, consisting of a Net with fine meshes between two with larger meshes, as opposed to the simple Nets, ἀπλάδια, Apost. pp. 32 f.

3. γρῖφος (γρῖπος) is the generic name for the draw-net or seine. Plutarch, as we have seen, couples γρῖφος and σαγήνη. Cf. A.P. vi. 23. 3 δέξο σαγηναίοι λίνου τετριμμένον ἄλμη | λείψανον, αὐχ-μηρόν, ξανθὲν ἐπ' ἡιόνων, | γρίπον τε; cf. Poll. i. 97, x. 132. So the Nets employed in analogous manner for the capture of land animals and bearing the same names are coupled by Plut. Mor. 471 D οὐδὲ ὁ γρίφοις καὶ σαγήναις ἐλάφους μὴ λαμβάνων. Apostolides p. 35 (who errs in thinking that Oppian identifies γρῖφος and ἀμφίβληστρον) describes the γρῖφος as consisting of two parallel nets, to which is attached another having the form of a sack. These two nets are called at Poros [off coast of Argolis] πτερά, "wings." The parallel Nets are suspended on two cords; the lower having hung on it at equal intervals pieces of lead (μολυβίθρες), the upper, called in some places σαρδούνας (cf. Xen. Cyn. 6. 9 σαρδονίων, Poll. v. 31 σαρδόνες), being hung with corks (φελλοί). The two pieces of wood, at the front ends of the two parallel Nets, to which is attached the cord by which the seine is drawn to land, are called at Paros σταλίκια, the triangular cord being called χαλινός.

Three species of seine are used in modern Greece according to Apostolides, 1. the γρῖπος proper, called in many places trata, consisting of two parallel nets with very large meshes and the bag-net with very fine meshes. It is cast by a special boat and drawn to land. It is used especially for Sardines and other surface fish. One of these Nets employs fifteen or more men. 2. The γριπαρόλι or κωλοβρέχτης, a smaller sort, managed by four men, used for catching Grey Mullets and other shore fishes. 3. The ἀνεμότρατα, a very large seine. In the use of this two boats are always associated. They set out early in the morning, taking advantage of the off-shore wind (ἀπόγιτος)—which in summer blows during the night from the land—and when they reach the open sea they cast the seine, moor their boats, and remain till mid-day. Then when the landward breeze begins to blow, the two boats proceed, parallel to one another, harbourwards, drawing the seine behind them.

4. γάγγαμον. The name γάγγαμον (γαγγάμον) is still used round the Black Sea, although in most parts of Greece a slightly altered form—γαγγάβα—is in use. The Net is a dredge-net and is employed in fishing for Sponges, Oysters, and Sea-urchins. It is constructed thus : “autour d'un arc en fer est cousu un filet de forme conique ; la corde, très large, de l'arc est aussi en fer ; de la corde et de l'arc partent en rayonnant différentes cordes, au point de rencontre desquelles est attachée une grosse corde au moyen de laquelle on tire l'appareil.” Cf. schol. γάγγαμον γαγγάμη, λίνος παχὺς δικτυωτός, σιδήρῳ κύκλῳ περιεχόμενος; Aesch. Ag. 361 μέγα δουλείας γάγγαμον ἄτης παναλώτου. Strabo 307, speaking of the cold in the region of the Sea of Azov, says : ὁρυκτοί τέ εἰσιν ιχθύες οἱ ἀποληφθέντες ἐν τῷ κρυστάλλῳ τῇ προσαγορευομένῃ γαγγάμη. Poll. ii. 169 τὸ δικτυῶδες ὅ καλεῖται νῦν γάγγαμον ἥ, ὡς οἱ πολλοί, σαγήνη; x. 132 γρῖφοι καὶ γάγγαμον; Hesych. s. γαγγάμη· σαγήνη ἥ δίκτυον ἀλιευτικόν; E.M. s. γαγγαμών . . . σημαίνει δὲ τὸ λαμβάνον δίκτυον. ἔστι κυρίως γαγγάμη σαγήνη ἥ δίκτυον.

5. ὑποχή. The schol. says “κυρίως δίκτυα περιφράττοντα καὶ ἐπέχοντα τόπους ἐν οἷς καὶ τὸ θυννοσκοπεῖον λεγόμενον.” It looks as if this note which describes the σαγήνη had got misplaced. All the evidence points to the ὑποχή being a bag-net, much like the modern shrimp-net. In modern Greek the word used is ἀποχή, cf. Apost. p. 39 “Les haveneaux, ἀποχαί, sont des filets en forme de poche à mailles très serrées, d'un mètre ou 50 centimètres d'ouverture. Le bord est tendu sur un arc en bois ou en fer dont une corde forme le rayon. Un bâton ou manche, terminé par une fourche en bois, est attaché au milieu de la corde. La partie moyenne de l'arc est solidement fixée un peu plus haut. En se servant de cet engin, pour la pêche des crevettes, le pêcheur entre dans l'eau jusqu'au genou, ratisse le fond en marchant devant lui, d'un mouvement continu, rasant le sable au moyen de la corde tendue. L'autre extrémité du manche est tenue sous le bras ou appuyée contre la poitrine,” cf. Plut. Mor. 977 ε ἀμφιβλήστροις μὲν γὰρ καὶ ὑποχαῖς κεστρεῖς καὶ ιονλίδες ἀλίσκονται, μόρμυροί τε καὶ σαργοὶ καὶ κωβιοὶ καὶ λάβρακες; Ael. xiii. 17 κορακίνους ταῖς ὑποχαῖς πολλοὺς συλλαβόντες.

6. σαγήνη, from which our Seine is ultimately derived (Lat. sagena, Fr. seine), is a large Seine or Draw-net. It seems to be undistinguishable from the γρῖφος and, like the γρῖφος, is sometimes a Fishing-net (Alciph. i. 18; 20; 21; Plut. Mor.

INTRODUCTION

977 F; Luc. Pisc. 51; Tim. 22, etc.), sometimes a Hunting-net (Plut. Mor. 471 D; Babr. 43. 8).

7. κάλυμμα. What sort of Net this is, is very uncertain. The metaphorical use in Aesch. Ch. 494 βουλευτοῖσιν ἐν καλύμμασιν, referring to the bathrobe which entangled Agamemnon, suggests an ἀμφίβληστρον, which is used immediately before (v. 492). Otherwise it may be the form of ὑποχή used in the Sporades and elsewhere for taking the Sea Crayfish or Spiny Lobster, Apost. p. 41 “C'est un haveneau dont le cercle de fer est disposé de manière à tourner autour d'un demi-cercle également en fer qui se fixe perpendiculairement aux extrémités de son diamètre. Sur ce second demi-cercle est attaché le baton ; il y a plus, le sommet de la poche du haveneau est pourvu d'un morceau de liège. Voilà comment on opère : Aussitôt qu'on a aperçu, au fond de la mer, une Langouste (ἀστακός vulg.), on la couvre avec le cercle sur lequel est tendue la poche, qui, grâce au liège flottant, reste ouverte dans toute sa hauteur. Une fois qu'on est certain que l'animal est dedans, qu'on le voit se cramponner contre les parois du filet, on enlève brusquement l'engin, le pois de l'animal alors, faisant bascule, entraîne la poche de haut en bas et fait tourner les cercles de fer autour de ces points d'appui ; ainsi l'animal se prend comme dans un sac et on le sort intact de la mer.”

8. πέζαι acc. to the schol. are a species of small Net (εἶδος καὶ τοῦτο δικτύου μικροῦ), while 9. σφαιρῶνες acc. to the schol. are round Nets (δίκτυα στρογγύλα). The σφαιρών is identified by Apost. p. 38, with the πεζόβολος or Casting-net.

10. πάναγρον is found already in Hom. Il. v. 487

Next we have fishing by means of Weels (κύρτοι), of which Apost. p. 51, says: "La pêche au moyen de nasses est bien simple, mais toutes n'ont pas la même forme: elle change suivant les poissons qu'on cherche à capturer. Ce sont des paniers, avec un orifice précédé d'une entrée cônique, par laquelle, une fois entrés, les poissons ne peuvent plus sortir. Pour attirer les poissons, on les amorce en mettant à l'intérieur des sardines salées, ou d'autres aliments souvent en putréfaction."

Next we have the use of the Trident, or Fish-spearing, which, according to Tristram, p. 292, is much used in the smaller streams and the northern rivers of the Lebanon; cf. Job xli. 7 "Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons? or his head with fish spears?" This method was practised either by day or at night by the light of a fire. For the former cf. Apost. p. 49 "La pêche au harpon est fort simple, elle dépend surtout de l'agilité du pêcheur à viser le poisson. Les habitants de l'île de Spetzia [off S. coast of Argolis] attachent à la hampe du trident une longue corde, lancent ainsi quelquefois le harpon à de grandes profondeurs. Mais les pêcheurs de Missolonghi sont plus adroits que tous les autres pêcheurs grecs. C'est à une véritable chasse aux poissons, surtout contre les daurades, les loups et les anguilles, qu'ils se livrent dans les lagunes qui entourent leur ville. Trente ou quarante bateaux armés de harpons (énormes fourchettes à trois dents) ou tridents se mettent en marche. Un seul pêcheur se tient sur le devant du bateau qu'il gouverne et fait marcher avec le trident en guise d'aviron et avec lequel il transperce les poissons qui se trouvent à sa portée."

Night-fishing by firelight ($\pi\upsilon\rho\epsilon\eta\tau\iota\kappa\eta$ Plato, Sophist, 220 D, $\pi\upsilon\rho\alpha\iota\iota$ A. 537 a 18, Poll. vii. 138) might be either with Trident or Net. The former is referred to in Oppian, H. iv. 640-646, Q. Smyrn. vii. 569-576, cf. Scott, Guy Mannering, c. xxvi.; the latter in Oppian, C. iv. 140 ff., cf. Apost. p. 40, where he describes the method of fishing for Belone (Gar-fish) in the Sporades: "Pendant les nuits les plus obscures du mois d'Octobre, aussitôt après l'arrivée des poissons, les bateaux quittent leur mouillage le soir et se rendent au large. Arrivés à l'endroit désigné, les pêcheurs amènent les voiles et marchent lentement à la rame en examinant la mer de tous côtés. Il est facile de se rendre compte de la présence du poisson en écoutant le bruit que font les dauphins qui le poursuivent à la surface de l'eau. Alors, les pêcheurs allument un grand feu avec du bois résineux sur une espèce de gril en fer, qu'ils fixent à la proue du navire ($\pi\upsilon\rho\phi\alpha\nu$ et $\pi\upsilon\rho\alpha\iota$ vulg.). Les poissons attirés par la lueur accourent vers le bateau comme pour y chercher un abri contre l'ennemi qui ne cesse de les décimer." After rowing about and making the boat turn upon itself some score of times, so as to reflect the light in all directions, they row slowly shorewards, followed by the fish. “On arrive ainsi à la côte. Là on prend des précautions pour que le bateau ne touche terre, le moindre choc faisant déguerpir aussitôt les poissons. On l’arrête à une distance d’un ou de deux mètres, et, laissant les rames, on prend les haveneaux en main, et l’on commence à envelopper le poisson des deux côtés du bateau.”

Fishing by poisoning the water, referred to by Oppian, H. iv. 647 ff., is said by Tristram, p. 292, to be very commonly practised on the Lake of Galilee by the poorest classes. “Men sit on a rock over-hanging the water, on which they scatter crumbs poisoned with vitriol, which are seized by the fish. As soon as they are seen to float on their backs, then men rush into the sea and collect them.”

Apost. p. 52 ff. gives an interesting account of fishing by Weirs and Stake-nets as practised in modern Greece; in a great number of river-mouths, the shallower waters of several gulfs, in lakes, pools, and lagoons, “les poissons sont pris exclusivement au moyen des écrilles et des claires de roseau. Tous les endroits sont appelés vulg. Bιβάπια,” i.e. Lat. vivaria. Similar methods are practised in Palestine, Tristram, p. 292, who says “Among the laws of Joshua, the Rabbis relate, was one forbidding the use of stake-nets in the Sea of Chinnereth (Galilee), for fear of damage to the boats.” The reader will remember that the use of stake-nets got a fictitious Joshua (Geddes) into trouble (Scott, Redgauntlet).

Finally, for the earliest references to Fly-fishing, natural or artificial—Mart. v. 18. 7 f., Ael. xiv. 22, xv. 1, the reader may be referred to the discussion in Radcliffe c. ix.

INTRODUCTION

IV. ON THE IDENTIFICATION OF CERTAIN FISHES

Ce que l'on doit le plus regretter dans cette masse d'instructions si précieuses, c'est que l'auteur [Aristotle] ne se soit pas douté que la nomenclature usitée de son temps pût venir à s'obscurcir, et qu'il n'ait pris aucune précaution pour faire reconnaître les espèces dont il parle. C'est le défaut général des naturalistes anciens ; on est presque obligé de deviner le sens des noms dont ils se sont servis ; la tradition même a changé, et nous induit souvent en erreur : ce n'est que par des combinaisons très pénibles, et le rapprochement des traits épars dans les auteurs, qu'on parvient sur quelques espèces à des résultats un peu positifs ; mais nous sommes condamnés à en ignorer toujours le plus grand nombre.

Cuvier et Valenciennes,
Histoire naturelle de poissons, i. p. 23.

Diese Unzulänglichkeit unsers jetzigen Wissens darf man sicherlich nicht ignoriren — wir sind überzeugt, dass mit der Vermehrung unsrer Kenntnisse in dieser Richtung, der Beobachtung des Haushaltes, der Lebensweise, der Instincte der Thiere Griechenlands eine grosse Anzahl von Angaben des Aristoteles bestätigt und in das rechte Licht gestellt werden wird.

Aubert u. Wimmer, p. 55.

Certains procédés de pêche qui existent chez nous étonnant le voyageur au point qu'il les range parmi les fables, se sont maintenus par la tradition. Ceux qui sont familiers avec les écrits des anciens, Aristote, Athénée, Théophraste, Xénocrate, Oppien, etc. et qui se sont occupés d'histoire naturelle, ne trouveront pas étrange notre assertion. Aucun naturaliste moderne n'a poussé la curiosité de l'observation et de la connaissance des mœurs et habitudes des animaux aussi loin que les anciens.

1. There can be no doubt that the reference in ἀνδρὸς ἐπωνυμίην θηλύφρονος is to the fish called κίναιδος (cf. the synonyms of κίναιδος in Poll. vi. 126 καταπύγων, . . . θηλυδρίας, . . . γυναικίας, . . . ἀνδρόγυνος, . . . θῆλυς τὴν ψυχήν), ἀλφηστής, ἀλφηστικός. The first name occurs Plin. xxxii. 146 Cinaedi soli piscium lutei, and is no doubt intended in Hesych. s. κιναονιδες (sic). *i*χθῦς. For the other names cf. Athen. 281 e. Apollodorus of Athens (b. circ. 180 B.C.), after quoting Sophron's "καταπυγοτέραν τ' ἀλφηστᾶν," says: "The ἀλφησταὶ are a species of fish, yellowish (κιρροειδεῖς) as a whole but purplish in parts. It is said that they are taken in couples, one following in the rear of the other. From this following in the rear (κατὰ τὴν πυγήν) of one another the name was applied to the licentious and lewd" (ἀκρατεῖς καὶ καταφερῖς) [i.e. καταπύγονες]. Aristotle ἐν τῷ περὶ Ζώων says "μονάκανθον (with a single spine) εἶναι καὶ κιρρὸν (yellow) τὸν ἀλφηστικόν." Numenius, of Heracleia, ἐν Ἀλιευτικῷ mentions it thus: <ἄλλοτε δ' αὖ πέρκας, ὅτε δὲ στροφάδας παρὰ πέτρην>^a | φυκίδας ἀλφηστήν τε καὶ ἐν χροιῇσιν ἐρυθρὸν | σκορπίον <ἢ πέρκαισι καθηγητὴν μελάνουρον>^a. INTRODUCTION

κίχλαι, πέρκαι, κωβιοί, φυκίδες, ἀλφηστικός. E.M. s. ἀλφηστής repeats Apollodorus in Athen. 281 e as quoted above; cf. E.M. s. θηλυτεράων ὅτι τὰ λοιπὰ ξῶα ὄρον ἔχει τῆς μίξεως τὴν σύλληψιν, αὗται δὲ ἀεί· διὸ ἐκ τοῦ ἐναντίου οἱ ἄνδρες ἀλφησταὶ λέγονται οἱ κατωφερεῖς, κατὰ μεταφορὰν ἀπὸ τῶν ἰχθύων ἀλφησταὶ γάρ εἶδος ἰχθύος. Hesych. s. ἀλφηστίς ἰχθύος εἶδος. In Homer ἀλφησταί is an obscure epithet of men in general, but in later Greek a bad association seems to have attached to ἀλφάνω and its derivatives, perhaps through an idea that παρθένοι ἀλφεσίβοιαι (Hom. Il. xviii. 593, H. Aphr. 119) meant—to quote Dugald Dalgetty—"such quae quaestum corporibus faciebant, as we said of Jean Drochiels at Marischal College" ^a; cf. Lycophron 1393 τῆς (Mestra) παντομόρφου βαστάρας λαμπουρίδος | τοκῆος (Erysichthon), ἦ τ' ἀλφαῖσι ταῖς καθ' ἡμέραν | βούπειναν ἀλθαίνεσκεν ἀκμαίαν πατρός.

The fish intended is one of the Wrasses (they had the repute of lasciviousness, cf. Epicharm. ap. Athen. 305 c [see too 287 b, E.M. s. βεμβράς] βαμβραδόνες τε καὶ κίχλαι λαγοὶ δράκοντές τ' ἀλκιμοι, where perhaps λάγνοι should be read: cf. κιχλίζω), such as Crenilabrus melops, the Gold-sinny or Corkwing.

2. The reading of the MSS. and schol. ἂς θ' would make ἂς refer to φυκίδες. So the Schol. φυκίδες· αἱ λαπίναι. τοῦτο δ' εἶπε σκώπτων τὸν γυναικώδη. φυκίδας εἶπεν ἐνταῦθα ὁ ποιητὴς θέλων λοιδορῆσαι τινα εὐνοῦχον φυκαρίζοντα (i.e. rouging) τὰς παρειὰς αὐτοῦ. ήν δ' ὁ εὐνοῦχος οὗτος ὃν λοιδορῆσαι θέλει ὁ ποιητής, ὡς ἔοικεν, ὁ καταλαλήσας τὸν Ἀγησίλαον τὸν πατέρα τοῦ ποιητοῦ εἰς τὸν βασιλέα Σεβῆρον, ὡς εἴπομεν, ὅτι κατεφρόνησεν ὁ Ἀγησίλαος ἔξελθεῖν εἰς

INTRODUCTION

A.P. vi. 105 τρίγλαν ἀπὸ ἀνθρακῆς καὶ φυκίδα σοί, λιμενῖτι | Ἀρτεμι, δωρεῦμαι (= Suid. s. φυκίδα). The statement that the φυκίς builds a nest led Cuvier to identify it with Gobius niger, the Black Goby. But all the other evidence points to one of the Wrasses (Labridae), for which χειλοῦ, φυκόφαρο, πετρόφαρο are in M.G. generic names, and it is now known that some at least of the Wrasses build nests. The schol. here, as we have seen above, interprets φυκίδες by λαπίναι. In M.G. Crenilabrus pavo is λήπταινα, at Chaleis λαπίνα μαύρη and λ. μεγάλη and this identification is in all probability right.

It should be pointed out that, both φυκίς and the κίναιδος being Wrasses, it is quite possible that Oppian or Oppian's source may have identified them and thus ἡς θ' may after all be the correct reading.

3. The Cirrhis (κίρρης) of H. i. 129, iii. 187, which is not mentioned in Aristotle, seems to be another of the Wrasses, perhaps Labrus mixtus, cf. E.M. s. κίρρης. ὁ ἵχθυς, ἐπειδὴ κιρρός ἔστι τὴν χροιάν. In H. i. 129 the schol., reading σκιρρής, interprets λεπιδυταί ἡ ὕσκας.

postremo greges adducit innumeros, iam vetustissimis quibusque adsuetis pisces ad agnoscere et e manu cibum rapere. Tum ille paulum ultra digitos in esca iaculatus hamum singulos involat verius quam capit, ab umbra navis brevi conatu rapiens ita ne ceteri sentiant, alio intus excipiente centonibus raptum, ne palpitatio ulla aut sonus ceteros abigat. Conciliatorem nosse ad hoc prodest ne capiatur, fugituro in reliquum grege. This is evidently the method described in Oppian, H. iii. 205 ff. and is identical with that which was used for the Aulopias in the Tyrrhenian islands (i.e. the Aeoliae insulae between Italy and Sicily) according to Ael. xiii. 17: "Having selected in advance places where they suppose the Aulopias to congregate and thereafter having caught in their scoop-nets (ὑποχαι) many Crow-fish (κορακίνους), they anchor their boat and keeping up a continuous din they project the Crow-fish attached to lines (ἄμμαστι). The Aulopias, hearing the din and beholding the bait, swim up from all directions and congregate and circle about the boat. And under the influence of the din and the abundance of food they become so tame that even when the fishermen stretch out their hands they remain and suffer the touch of man, enslaved, as I should judge, by the food but, as the experts say, already confident in their valour. And there are among them tame ones whom the fishermen recognize as their benefactors and comrades and towards these they maintain a truce. These leaders are followed by stranger fishes which, as aliens, so to say, the fishermen hunt and kill. But with regard to the tame fishes, the position of which is like that of decoy pigeons, they refrain from hunting them and observe a truce, nor would any pressure of circumstances induce a wise fisherman to catch a tame Aulopias intentionally : for he is grieved even when he catches one accidentally." Ael. xii. 47, on the capture of the Anthias, has nothing which helps identification.

(6) Ananios, ap. Athen. 282 b, the Anthias is in prime condition in winter.

(7) The Aulopias is described Ael. xiii. 17 : "About the Tyrrhenian islands fishermen catch the huge (κητώδη) fish which is found there and which they call Aulopias. . . . In size the largest Aulopias is inferior to the largest Tunnies, but in strength and prowess it would bear away the palm in comparison with them. . . . It opposes the fisherman as an equal adversary, and for the most part gets the better of him. . . . When caught it is beautiful to behold, having the eyes open and round and large, like the ox-eyes of which Homer sings. The jaw is strong . . . yet adds to the beauty of the fish. The back is of the deepest blue, the belly white ; from the head a gold-coloured line extends to the hinder part where it ends in a circle."

(8) Oppian thrice mentions the Anthias. (i) H. i. 248-258 the Anthias frequents deep rocks, but ranges everywhere under the impulse of gluttony. The mouth is toothless. There are four species—yellow, white, black, and a fourth called εὐλωπός or αὐλωπός, οὖνεκα τοῖς καθύπερθεν ἐλισσομένη κατὰ κύκλον όφρὺς ἡερόεσσα περίδρομος ἐστεφάνωται (256 f.).

The precise meaning of αὐλωπός is not easy to determine (schol. στενοφθάλμους . . . τοὺς ἔχοντας μεγάλους ὄφθαλμοὺς δίκην αὐλῶν, ὅποιοι εἰσιν οἱ τῶν lvi

Xen. Symp. v. 5 καρκίνον εὔοφθαλμότατον εἶναι τῶν ἔψων. (ii) H. iii. 192 the bait for the Anthias is the Basse (λάβραξ). (iii) H. iii. 205-334, where he describes modes of fishing for the Anthias, and says its “mouth is unarmed” (στόμα τοῦσιν ἀσπλον), i.e. is toothless (328). His account of its struggles to escape—βιώμενος εἰς ἀλαδῦναι (310)—shows that he means by Anthias what Aelian means by Aulopias, xiii. 17 ὡς πρὸς ἀντίπαλον ἴσταται τὸν ἀλιέα καὶ κρατεῖ τὰ πλεῖστα, ἐπὶ μᾶλλον ἔαυτὸν πιέσας καὶ κάτω νεύσας τὴν κεφαλὴν καὶ ὥθησας κατὰ τοῦ βυθοῦ.

(9) Archestratus ap. Athen. 326 α νεαροῦ μεγάλου τ' αὐλωπία ἐν θέρει ὠνοῦ | κρανία also suggests a large fish.

Callichthys. To Oppian Callichthys (1) differs from Anthias, (2) is called ἱερὸς ἰχθύς, (3) is comparable in strength to the Anthias, (4) is a deep-sea fish, (5) is called Callichthus, i.e. Beauty-fish, on account of its beauty: H. i. 179 οἱ δ' ἐν ἀμετρήτοισιν ἀλην πελάγεσσιν ἔχοντι, | τηλοῦ ἀπὸ τραφερῆς οὐδὲ γόσιν εἰσὶν ἑταῖροι . . . ἐν τοῖς καὶ κάλλιχθις ἐπώνυμος, ἱερὸς ἰχθύς; H. iii. 191 θύννῳ μὲν κάλλιχθις ἱaineται, αὐτὰρ ὄνισκοις | ὄρκυνος, λάβρακα δ' ἐπ' ἀνθίῃ ὄπλιζοι; iii. 335 (after an account of capture of Anthias) τοῖον καὶ κάλλιχθις ἔχει σθένος ἡδὲ γενέθλη | ὄρκύνων ὅσσοι τε δέμας κητώδεες ἄλλοι | πλάζονται· τοίοις δὲ βραχίοσιν ἀγρώσσονται; v. 627 ff. sponge-cutters are safe if they see a κάλλιχθις: τῷ καὶ μιν ἐφήμισαν ἱερὸν ἰχθύν. Bussemaker, identifying it with ἀνθίας εὐωπός, makes it Serranus gigas, the Métou, which we identify with ὄρφός.

The epithet ἱερός is used of a fish in Hom. Il. xvi. 407 ὡς ὅτε τις φὼς | πέτρῃ ἐπὶ προβλῆτι καθήμενος ἱερὸν ἵχθυν | ἐκ πόντοι θύραξ λίνῳ καὶ ἥνοπι χαλκῷ (sc. ἔλκη), where acc. to the schol. some interpreted πομπίλος, some κάλλιχθυς, while others took the epithet in a general sense (ἀντὸν καὶ εὐτραφῆ, ὡς ἱερὸν βοῦν λέγομεν τὸν ἀνειμένον). From Athen. 282 e sq. it seems that ἱερός was used of several fishes besides the Anthias (Dolphin, Pilot-fish, Gilthead, etc.) and, while Athenaeus himself seems to identify Anthias and Callichthys, he tells us that Dorion denied the identity : Athen. 282 c μνημονεύει δ' αὐτοῦ καὶ Δωρίων ἐν τῷ περὶ ἵχθύων “τὸν δ' ἀνθίαν τινὲς καὶ κάλλιχθυν καλοῦσιν, ἔτι δὲ καλλιώνυμον καὶ ἔλοπα”. . . . Ἀριστοτέλης δὲ καὶ καρχαρόδοντα εἶναι τὸν κάλλιχθυν σαρκοφάγον τε καὶ συναγελαζόμενον. Ἐπίχαρμος δ' ἐν Μούσαις τὸν μὲν ἔλοπα [cf. Ael. viii. 28] καταριθμεῖται, τὸν δὲ καλλιώνυμον ἦ καλλιώνυμον ὡς τὸν αὐτὸν ὄντα σεσίγηκεν. . . . Δωρίων δ' ἐν τῷ περὶ ἵχθύων διαφέρειν φησὶν ἀνθίαν καὶ κάλλιχθυν, ἔτι τε καὶ καλλιώνυμον καὶ ἔλοπα; cf. E.M. s. ἀνθεία (sic). εἶδος ἵχθυος· ἀνθίαν τινὲς καὶ κάλλιχθυν καλοῦσι καὶ καλλιώνυμον καὶ ἔλλοπα; Suid. s. ἱερὸν ἵχθυν· . . . οὐ τὸν κάλλιχθυν ἦ τὸν πομπίλον, ὡς τινες.

Callionymus.—The Callionymus is almost certainly Uranoscopos scaber, the Hemerocoetes or Nycteris of Oppian (see note on H. ii. 199 ff.). It is an ugly fish and was only euphemistically called καλλιώνυμος: cf. E.M. s. ἀλεσούριος· εἶδος ἵχθυος θαλασσίου ὄν τινες κατ' εὐφημισμὸν καλλιώνυμον καλοῦσιν κτλ.; Hesych. s. καλλιώνυμος and s. ἀλεσούριον. From its habit of hiding in the sand it was also called ψαμμοδύτης or Sand-diver, Hesych. s. ψαμμοδύτης ἵχθυς, ὃν καὶ καλλιώνυμον ὄνομάζουσιν. The similarity of name might easily lead to confusion with κάλλιχθος, but we think that in discussing the identity of that fish and of the Anthias the Callionymus may be left out of the question.

The identification of the Anthias and the Callichthys has hitherto proved an insoluble problem. Both are pelagic fishes, comparable in size to the Tunny. The one definite distinction between them, if we can trust it, is that the Anthias is, according to Oppian H. i. 253 and iii. 328, toothless, whereas according to Athen. 282 c Aristotle described the Callichthys as καρχαρόδοντος.

Rondelet,^a who supposed the name Anthias to be applied to more than one fish, identified his Anthias primus with Serranus anthias—the Barbier of the Mediterranean—Labrus anthias L., Anthias sacer Bloch, “le plus beau poisson de mer, aux couleurs les plus éclatantes” (Apost. p. 13). “Le barbier est un des plus beaux poissons de la Méditerranée et des plus faciles à caractériser. La longue épine flexible qui s'élève sur son dos, les filets qui prolongent ses

* Guillaume Rondelet (b. at Montpellier in 1507), the greatest of the sixteenth-century naturalists who laid the foundations of modern Ichthyology. He had a unique knowledge of the fishes of the Mediterranean. Of his work on fishes the first part, Libri de piscibus marinis in quibus verae piscium effigies expressae sunt, appeared at Lyons in 1554; the second, Universae aquatilium historiae pars altera, cum veris ipsorum imaginibus in 1555. Almost simultaneously P. Belon (who was murdered by robbers when gathering herbs at a late hour in the Bois de Boulogne, no doubt in connexion with a translation of Dioscorides, on which he was engaged) published his De aquatilibus libri ii., Paris, 1553; H. Salviani his Aquatilium animalium historia, 1554–1557; and Conrad Gesner—the correspondent of Dr. John Caius—his Historiae animalium liber ir., qui est de piscium et aquatilium animantium natura, Zürich, 1558.

ventrales, et les deux lobes de sa caudale, surtout l'inférieur, suffiraient pour le distinguer de tous les autres poissons ; enfin, l'éclat de l'or et du rubis dont brillent ses écailles, auraient dû attirer de tout temps l'attention des naturalistes" (Cuv. ii. p. 250). Against this identification Cuvier vigorously protests : "rien n'a été hasardé plus légèrement, et même, si quelque chose en cette matière peut être susceptible de preuve, c'est qu'aucun des caractères attribués à des anthias ne convient au barbier." For his own part Cuvier would identify the Anthias with Thynnus alalonga, the Albicore : "Pour moi, si j'étais obligé de me prononcer sur le poisson qui a porté ce nom autrefois, je dirais au moins de l'anthias d'Élien que c'est le germon (Scomber alalonga). Il est un peu moindre que le thon, qu'il accompagne souvent ; il va en grandes troupes. Son dos est bleu ; son ventre blanc. On voit sur ses flancs une ligne argentée. On ne peut pas dire qu'il manque de dents ; mais il les a plus faibles même que le thon. On en prend en abondance près des côtes de Sardaigne, et l'on y en prendrait encore davantage, si l'on faisait les mailles des mandragues un peu plus petites que pour le thon.

"Certainement bien des poissons décrits par les anciens, et que l'on croit avoir reconnus, ne l'ont pas été sur autant de caractères.

"A la vérité, il n'y a point de germons, ni d'espèces voisines, qui soient blanches, jaunes ou rouge-noir, comme Oppien le dit de ses anthias ; mais nous sommes si accoutumés à voir le même nom appliqué chez les anciens aux êtres les plus différens, que nous ne devons pas nous étonner qu'Oppien ait entendu celui d'anthias autrement qu'Élien. Peut-être a-t-il voulu parler du mérou, du cernier, ou de tel autre très-grand acanthoptérygien : toujours est-il certain qu'il n'a point désigné, par l'épithète de μεγακήτεα, le barbier, petit poisson qui passe à peine cinq ou six pouces."

The legend that the Glaucus takes in its young would suggest a Dog-fish, but the possession of caeca mentioned in A. 508 b 20 is against that supposition, since Selachians have no caeca. Cuvier makes the Glaucus Sciaena aquila. Bussemaker makes it some species of Cod (Gadi quaedam species).

Onos or Assfish : Oniscus : Callarias

1. The ὄνος is mentioned twice in Aristotle: (a) A. 599 b 26 "Some fishes hide (φωλεῖ) in the sand, some in the mud, with only the mouth projecting. The majority hide only in winter—Crustaceans and Rock-fishes and Rays and Cartilaginous fishes only during the winriest days, as is shown by the fact that they are not caught when the weather is cold. But some fishes hide also in summer, for instance the Glaucus, which hides in summer for about 60 days. The Onos and the Gilthead also hide [i.e. in summer]. That the Onos hides for the longest time seems to be proved by the fact that there is the longest interval when it is not caught. And that the fishes hide in summer seems to be indicated by the fact that catches are made only at the rising^a of the constellations, particularly at the rising of the Dog-star; for at that time the sea is turned up, a thing which is very well known in the Bosphorus. For the mud comes to the top and the fishes are brought up. It is said too that often when the sea-bottom is dredged, more fish are caught by the second haul than by the first; and after heavy rains many creatures become visible which previously were not seen at all or only infrequently." Cf. Oppian, H. i. 151. See below. (b) A. 620 b 29 καθαμίζοντι δ' ἔαντα καὶ ὄνος καὶ βάτος καὶ ψῆττα καὶ ρίνη, καὶ ὅταν ποιήσῃ ἔαντα ἄδηλα, εἴτα ῥαβδεύεται τοῖς ἐν τῷ στόματι ἀ καλοῦσιν οἱ ἀλιεῖς ῥαβδίᾳ προσέρχονται δ' ὡς πρὸς φυκία ἀφ' ὧν τρέφονται. It may be noted that the ὄνος is absent in the rendering of this passage in Pliny ix. 144 simili modo squatina [= ρίνη, cf. Plin. xxxii. 150 rhine quem squatum vocamus] et rhombus [=ψῆττα] abditi pinnas exsertas movent specie vermiculorum, item quae vocantur raiae [=βάτοι].

Other references to the ὄνος are Athen. 315 e ὄνος καὶ ὄνισκος. "ὄνος, φησὶν Ἀριστοτέλης ἐν τῷ περὶ ἔωικῶν, ἔχει στόμα ἀνερρωγός ὄμοιώς τοῖς γαλεοῖς· καὶ οὐ συναγελαστικός. καὶ μόνος οὗτος ἴχθύων τὴν καρδίαν ἐν τῇ κοιλίᾳ ἔχει καὶ ἐν τῷ ἐγκεφάλῳ λίθοις ἐμφερεῖς μύλαις. φωλεύει τε μόνος ἐν ταῖς ἵπδ κύνα θερμοτάταις ἡμέραις, τῶν ἄλλων ταῖς χειμεριωτάταις φωλεύοντων.

* As the Editor has elsewhere shown, references to a star as indicating the time of year are (unless the context very definitely—not merely implies—but explicitly asserts the opposite) always to the rising (heliacal) of a star.

2. Dorion, as quoted above, distinguished ὄνος and ὄνισκος, which we may take to mean that they were not usually distinguished. Oppian thrice mentions the ὄνισκος, H. iii. 191 as bait for the ὄρκυνος; H. i. 105 where he says its habitat is in πηλοῖσι καὶ ἐν τενάγεστι θαλάσσης (102), while the habitat of the ὄνος is ἐν βένθεσσιν H. i. 145 ff. Lastly, H. i. 593, the mode of propagation of the ὄνισκος is said to be unknown. To Oppian therefore the ὄνος and ὄνισκος were different fishes. On the other hand they are identified by Eustath. Hom. p. 862 ὄνος, ἰχθὺς ποιός, ὁ καὶ ὄνισκος καὶ βάκχος.

INTRODUCTION

3. The Latin asellus represents ὄνος. Ovid, Hal. 131 Et tam deformi non dignus nomine asellus; Plin. xxxii. 145 peculiares autem maris . . . asellus. See below for Plin. ix. 58.

Callarias.—Oppian, H. i. 105 mentions καλλαρίαι along with the ὄνισκος, where incidentally it may be noted that the schol. has ὄνισκων ἀειδάρων (γαδαρίων?). We have seen above that Archestratus ap. Athen. 316 a equates ὄνος with καλλαρίαι. Cf. Athen. 118 c καθάπερ καὶ τὸν χελλαρίην καὶ γὰρ τοῦτον ἔνα ὄντα ἵχθυν πολλῶν ὄνομασιῶν τετυχηκέναι καλεῖσθαι γὰρ καὶ βάκχον καὶ ὄνισκον καὶ χελλαρίην; Hesych. s. γαλαρίας ἵχθυς ὁ ὄνικός, and Hesych. s. γαλίας οἱ ὄνισκοι; Hesych. s. λαζίνης χαραδρίας καλαρίας ἵχθυς; Pliny ix. 61 postea praecipuam auctoritatem fuisse lupo et asellis Nepos Cornelius et Laberius poeta mimorum tradidere . . . asellorum duo genera collyri [=callariae] minores et bacchi, qui non nisi in alto capiuntur, ideo praelati prioribus; Plin. xxxii. 146 collyris, asellorum generis, ni minor esset. Plin. xxxii. 145 mentions bacchus among the “peculiares maris.”

The generally accepted opinion is that those fishes are Gadidae or members of the Cod-family. A difficulty is suggested by Athen. 306 e where discussing the Grey Mullets he says καταδεέστεροι δὲ πάντων οἱ χελλῶνες οἱ λεγόμενοι βάκχοι. The ὄνος is traditionally identified with the Hake (Gadus merluccius L., Merluccius vulgaris Cuv.), cf. Ital. asinello, Gr. γάδος. A. 620 b 29 (quoted above) would seem to imply that the ὄνος has some sort of oral appendages which it employs in catching smaller fishes. The Hake has nothing of the sort, not even barbels (which the Fork-beard Hake, Phycis blennioides, and the Mediterranean Hake, P. mediterranea, have). But it seems probable that in Aristotle l.c. either ὄνος should be omitted, as Plin. ix. 144 omits it, or that ραβδεύεται should not be extended to it. Bussemaker makes ὄνος Gadus mustela L., ὄνισκος, Gadus merlangus L.

This is a convenient place to explain Oppian, H. i. 151 ff. “Among these also is numbered the Hake, which beyond all fishes shrinks from the bitter assault of the Dog-star in summer, and remains retired within his dark recess and comes not forth so long as the breath of the fierce star prevails.” The origin of this passage is A. 599 b 33 φωλεῖ δὲ καὶ ὁ ὄνος καὶ ὁ χρύσοφρυς σημεῖον δὲ δοκεῖ εἶναι τοῦ τὸν ὄνον πλεῖστον φωλεῖν χρόνον τὸ διὰ πλεῖστου χρόνου ἀλίσκεσθαι. τοῦ δὲ καὶ θέρους τὸν ἵχθυς φωλεῖν δοκεῖ σημεῖον εἶναι τὸ ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀστροῖς γίνεσθαι τὰς ἀλώσεις καὶ μάλιστα ἐπὶ κυνί· τηνικαῦτα γὰρ ἀνατρέπεσθαι τὴν θάλατταν ὅπερ ἐν τῷ Βοσπόρῳ γνωριμώτατόν ἐστιν· ἡ γὰρ ἴλὺς ἐπάνω γίνεται καὶ ἐπιφέρονται οἱ ἵχθύες. A. and W. understand ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀστροῖς to mean “at the setting” of certain constellations and the Oxford translation “between the rise and setting of certain constellations” is no improvement. It means “at the rising of the constellations” as Pliny ix. 58 rightly understood; Quidam rursus aestus impatientia mediis fervoribus sexagenis diebus latent, ut glaucus, asellus, auratae. Fluviatilium silurus caniculae exortu sideratur . . . et alioqui totum mare sentit exortum eius sideris, quod maxime in Bosporo apparet. Alga enim et pisces superferuntur omniaque ab imo versa. The meaning is that the hiding of the ὄνος in summer is indicated by the fact that when the sea is turned up by stormy weather catches of this fish occur. Cf.

INTRODUCTION

Ael. vi. 30 Σειρίου δὲ ἐπιτολῆ φωλείει μόρος [ὁ ὄνος], τῶν ἄλλων ἐν ταῖς κρυμαδεστάταις φωλείειν εἰθισμένων; Ael. ix. 38 ἀριθμοῖτο δ' ἂν ἐν τούτοις [i.e. among fishes which hide in summer] καὶ ὁ ὄνος· δέδοικε δὲ μάλιστα ἵχθύων τὴν τοῦ Σειρίου ἐπιτολὴν οὖτος. For the convulsion of the sea at the rising of the Dog-star cf. Plin. ii. 107 caniculae exortu accendi solis vapores quis ignorat? cuius sideris effectus amplissimi in terra sentiuntur: fervent maria exidente eo. And for the association of weather phenomena with the Rising and Setting of certain stars cf. Plin. ii. 105 ut solis ergo natura temperando intelligitur anno, sic reliquorum quoque siderum propria est quibusque vis et ad suam cuique naturam fertilis. Alia sunt in liquorem soluti umoris secunda, alia concreti in pruinias aut coacti in nives aut glaciati in grandines, alia flatus, alia teporis, alia vaporis, alia roris, alia rigoris. . . . Nec meantium modo siderum [i.e. Planets] haec vis est sed multorum etiam adhaerentium caelo [i.e. Fixed Stars].

Cetus : Phalaena : Physalus

Κήτεα is used in Oppian, C. i. 71, H. i. 360, v. 46 to denote the larger sea-beasts generally, including not only the Cetaceans (Whales and Dolphins) but also Selachians (cf. H. v. 63 where νόσφι κυνῶν implies that the Dog-fish are included among the θῆρες ἵπερφνέες = κήτεα). Cf. Strabo 24 τοῖς μείζοσι τῶν ζώων οἷον δελφίνων καὶ κυνῶν καὶ ἄλλων κητωδῶν. But in H. v. 71 ff. the singular κῆτος seems to indicate a definite animal, and the indications point to the Cachalot or Sperm Whale, Physeter macrocephalus, the only large Whale possessing teeth

OPPIAN

(v. 140). For the occurrence of the Cachalot in Greek waters cf. H. 368 n. With the account of the hunting of the κῆτος H. v. 111 ff. the reader may compare the hunting of the Sword-fish (ξιφίας or γαλεώτης) in the Straits of Messina as described in Strabo (after Polybius) 24: "One outlook is set for a large number of men who lie in waiting in two-oared boats, two men in each boat. One man rows, the other stands on the prow armed with a spear, when the outlook indicates the appearance of the Sword-fish—the animal swims with a third of its body projecting above the water. When the boat has come to close quarters, the spearman strikes the fish and then withdraws his spear from its body excepting the point, which is barbed and is purposely attached but loosely to the shaft and has a long rope fastened to it. This rope they pay out to the wounded fish until it is weary of struggling and trying to escape. Then they hale it to land or, if it is not altogether a full-sized fish, they take it on board the boat. Even if the spear-shaft fall into the sea, it is not lost, as it is made of oak and pine, and while the oaken part is submerged by its weight the remainder floats and is easily recoverable. Sometimes the oarsman gets wounded through the boat owing to the size of the animal's sword and because its strength, as also the manner of hunting it, is comparable to that of the Wild Boar."

Phalaena H. i. 404 and Physalus H. i. 368 are sufficiently discussed in the notes on these passages. If they are not identical, possibly Phalaena may be, as A. and W. incline to think, Delphinus tursio, and Physalus the Cachalot. Bussemaker, identifying

Physalus with the Cachalot, takes Phalaena to be Balaena musculus, properly Balaenoptera musculus, the Common Finner, the average length of the males being about 60 feet, that of the females rather more.

V. SOME ANIMAL IDIOSYNCRASIES

1. Narce, Torpedo, Crampfish, or Electric Ray : H. i. 104, ii. 56 ff., H. iii. 149 ff. In all the Torpedoes the electric organ consists of a large patch of hexagonal cells, as many as 400 in the larger species. These are placed under the skin on each side of the head, below and behind the eye, and covering the base of the enlarged pectoral fin. They are modified muscle-cells and each is filled with a clear jelly-like substance. The shock which the animal communicates when touched is capable of being carried along a metallic conductor, such as a knife or spear, and is said to render the needle magnetic and to decompose chemical compounds. The exercise of this power soon exhausts its possessor and renders a period of recuperation necessary.

2. Fox feigning death : H. i. 107 ff. "When a fox is caught in a trap or run down by dogs he fights savagely at first, but by-and-by he relaxes his efforts, drops on the ground, and apparently yields up the ghost. The deception is so well carried out that dogs are constantly taken in by it, and no one, not previously acquainted with this clever trickery of nature, but would at once pronounce the creature dead, and worthy of some praise for having perished in so brave a spirit. Now, when in this condition of feigning death, I am quite sure that the animal does not altogether lose consciousness. It is exceedingly difficult to discover any evidence of life in the opossum ; but when one withdraws a little way from the feigning fox, and watches him very attentively, a slight opening of the eye may be detected ; and, finally, when left to himself, he does not recover and start up like an animal that has been stunned, but slowly and cautiously raises his head first, and only gets up when his foes are at a safe distance. Yet I have seen gauchos, who are very cruel to animals, practise the most barbarous experiments on a captured fox without being able to rouse it into exhibiting any sign of life. This has greatly puzzled me, since, if death-feigning is simply a cunning habit, the animal could not suffer itself to be mutilated without wincing. I can only believe that the fox, though not insensible, as its behaviour on being left to itself appears to prove, yet has its body thrown by extreme terror into that benumbed condition which simulates death, and during which it is unable to feel the tortures practised on it.” W. H. Hudson, The Naturalist in La Plata (1903).

3. Deer and Snakes: C. ii. 233 ff., H. ii. 289 ff.
“The gauchos of the pampas give a reason for the powerful smell of the male deer. . . . They say that the effluvium of Cervus campestris is abhorrent to snakes of all kinds . . . and even go so far as to describe its effect as fatal to them ; according to this, the smell is therefore a protection to the deer. In places where venomous snakes are extremely abundant, as in the Sierra district on the southern pampas of Buenos Ayres, the gaucho frequently ties a strip of the male deer's skin, which retains its powerful odour for an indefinite time, round the neck of a valuable horse as a protection. . . . Considering then the conditions in which C. campestris is placed—and it might also be supposed that venomous snakes have in past times been much more numerous than they are now—it is not impossible to believe that the powerful smell it emits has been made protective. . . . The gaucho also affirms that the deer cherishes a wonderful animosity against snakes ; that it becomes greatly excited when it sees one and proceeds at once to destroy it, they say, by running round and round it in a circle, emitting its violent smell in larger measure, until the snake dies of suffocation. It is hard to believe that the effect can be so great ; but that the deer is a snake hater and killer is certainly true : in North America, Ceylon, and other districts deer have been observed excitedly leaping on serpents, and killing them with their sharp-cutting hoofs." W. H. Hudson, op. cit.

4. The Life-history of the Eel (Anguilla vulgaris) : H. i. 513 ff. The propagation of the Eel is referred to several times in Aristotle's History of Animals : 538 a 3 "The Eel is neither male nor female and engenders nothing of itself. Those who assert that they are sometimes found with hairy or worm-like attachments speak inconsiderately, not observing the situation of these attachments. For no such animal is viviparous without being oviparous and no Eel has ever been seen with an egg ; and viviparous animals have their young in the womb and closely attached, not in the belly." To the same effect 570 a 3 sq. where he adds : "Eels spring from the so-called

'earth's entrails' ($\gamma\hat{\eta}s \ \check{e}v\tau\epsilon\rho a$, earth-worms), which grow spontaneously in mud and moist ground. Eels have in fact sometimes been seen to emerge from such earth-worms and at other times have been rendered visible when the earth-worms were laid open by scraping or cutting. Such earth-worms are found both in the sea and in rivers, particularly where there is decayed matter." Cf. 517 b 8, 567 a 21, 569 a 6, 608 a 5.

Till within the last half-century or so the problem remained in much the same position as it was in the time of Aristotle, but in recent years and in particular through the systematic and elaborate investigations of Dr. J. Schmidt, the life-history of the Eel has been greatly elucidated. The result of these investigations may be briefly summarized :

The Eel is oviparous and its spawning-ground is in the deep waters of the Atlantic Ocean near the Bermudas. Thence the larval "Ribbon-eels" travel eastward, a direction of migration which is instinctive and not due to drift of the current, as is proved by experiments with bottles and the like cast overboard. After a journey which lasts for about two years the young Eels in their third year, when about three inches in length, enter the European rivers, being now known as Elvers or "Glass-Eels." They ascend the rivers in spring, travelling in compact bodies and swimming close to the river-banks. They show remarkable determination in their upward journey, overcoming such obstacles as waterfalls by wriggling through the grass upon the banks. Examination of the growth-rings on the minute scales, on the otoliths ("ear-stones"), and on the centra of the vertebrae, shows that at three years of age, after a year in fresh water, an Eel is about $3\frac{1}{2}$ inches long, at 5 years it is about 6 inches, at 8 years about 1 foot, and at 13 years nearly 2 feet in length.

Eels do not spawn in fresh waters. When the period of maturity approaches and with it the reproductive impulse, at the age of from 6 to 10 years, they become silvery in appearance ("Silver-eels"), their eyes become larger, and they make for the rivers in which they descend to the sea. Having reached the sea they travel oceanwards, at an average rate of more than 9 miles a day, on their final journey —pour l'amour et pour la mort—of over 2000 miles to their breeding-ground in the depths of the Atlantic Ocean, where they spawn and die.

The occurrence of Eels in land-locked waters, which seemed to complicate the problem of their origin and mode of propagation, is explained by the ability of the Eel to exist for a considerable time out of the water (A. 592 a 13, Plin. ix. c. 38) and to the agility of the young Eels in travelling for some distance overland (A. Part. An. 696 a 5, Theophrast. $\pi\epsilon\rho\lambda\ i\chi\theta\omega\tau\tau\omega\nu\ \acute{\epsilon}\nu\ \tau\phi\ \xi\eta\rho\delta\iota\alpha\tau\rho\iota\beta\acute{o}\nu\tau\omega\nu$ fr. 171), and so making their way even into waters from which the adult Eels under the reproductive impulse in vain endeavour to escape. On the other hand there are no Eels in the Danube, nor in the Black Sea or the Caspian Sea, these waters being beyond the reach of the young Eels migrating from the Atlantic Ocean.

ART. Be silent about deadly passion and leave alone the girdles^a of love : I abhor what men call the toys of the Daughter of the Sea.^b

OPP. We have heard, O blessed Lady, that thou art uninitiate in marriage.^c

ART. Sing the battles of wild beasts and hunting men ; sing of the breeds of hounds and the varied tribes of horses ; the quick-witted counsels, the deeds of skilful tracking ; tell me the hates of wild beasts, sing their friendships and their bridal chambers of tearless love upon the hills, and the births which among wild beasts need no midwifery.

Such were the counsels of the daughter of mighty Zeus. I hear, I sing : may my song hit the mark!^d But do thou, who rulest from the East unto the Ocean,^e with serene joy on thine immortal brows, vouchsafe thy right hand gracious and prosperous to land and cities and to songs of the happy chase.

Triple^f sorts of hunting hath God bestowed on men—in air and on earth and on the sea delightful. But not equal is the venture : for how can these be equal—to draw the writhing fish from the deeps or hale the winged birds from the air and to contend with deadly wild beasts on the hills ? Yet not for the fisherman either and truly not^g for the fowler is their hunting without toil. But their toil only pleasure attends and no bloodshed : unstained of gore are they. The angler sits on the rocks beside the sea and with curving rods and deadly hooks he catches, at his ease, the fish of varied sheen ; and joy is his when he strikes home with barbs of bronze and sweeps through the air the writhing dancer of the sea, leaping high above the deeps. Yea and to the fowler his toil is sweet ; for to their hunt the fowlers carry nor sword nor bill nor brazen spear, but the Hawk^a is their attendant when they travel to the woods, and the long cords^b and the clammy yellow birdlime^c and the reeds^d that tread an airy path. Sea-monster to the Elephant? Hunters kill Wolves, fishermen kill Tunnies; the hunter with his net takes Sheep, the fowler with his reeds takes Doves; the hunter with his hounds takes the Bear, the angler takes the Mormyrus^a; the mounted hunter takes the Tiger, the fisher with his trident takes the Red Mullet^b; the tracker takes the Boar, the fowler with his birdlime takes the Nightingale. But thou, Nereus, and ye gods of Amphitrite and the choir of Dryads who love the birds, grant me your grace! For now dear themes of song invite me earnestly; I, turning back,^c proceed to sing to the gods of the chase.

But the old Lexica (Hesych., etc.) confuse this ἔρως with ἔρως=genuine and ἔτωσις=vain (the schol. on our passage has ἔρως. ἔστι μάραυς) and, whatever the punctuation and syntax intended, the sense seems to be as we have given it.

First, give me young men who are not over-stout.^d For the hunter must mount^e the noble horse amid the rocks and anon must leap a ditch. And often in the woods must he with light feet and nimble limbs pursue the wild beast. Therefore let them not be stout who come to the warfare of the chase, nor yet over-lean; for at times the keen hunter must contend with warlike wild beasts. So I would have them bear a body tempered thus—both swift to run and strong to fight. And in the right hand let them brandish two^f long javelins and have a hunting-bill^g at the midst of their girdle. For they should both array bitter slaughter for wild beasts and also carry defences against evil men. With his left hand the hunter on foot should lead his hounds ; with his left the mounted hunter should guide the bridle that steers his horse. Let him wear a tunic well-girt ^a and fastened above the knee and held tight by crossing straps. Again on either side of his neck let his mantle ^b be flung back over his strong shoulders to hang away from the hands, for easy toil. With naked feet should they travel who study the dim tracks of wild beasts, lest the noise of their sandals grating under their sleek feet drive sleep from the eyes of the wild beasts. To have no mantle at all were much better ; since many a time a cloak stirred by the breath of the noisy wind alarms the wild beasts and they start up to flee. Thus let hunters well array the agile body ; for such doth the archer daughter of Leto love.

Other times ^c at other hour let them go after the wild beasts—at rising morn and when the day wanes and at mid-day and anon at evening ; sometimes again even in the dark they slay wild beasts by the rays of the moon.^d The whole span of day is favourable and fair to the hunter for all-day coursing in leafy spring ^e and in autumn when the leaves fall.

For excellent well tempered for the running of horses and men and carrion dogs are the seasons in golden spring which puts to rout the chilly clouds ; when the sea is navigable for seafaring men, who spread the white rigging of their canvas-winged ships, what time the earth rejoices in them that tend plants ; when, too, she looses the bands of bud and flower ; or again in late autumn ^a when the year is on the turn, when the house of the rustic vintager flourishes ; when the fruit of Athena ^b fills the shining pail ^c and the clusters of the garden vines joyfully straiten ^d the wine-vats ; when the lilywhite combs fill the hives of the bees. But in mid-winter let the hunters hunt at mid-day, in the season when in the woods the swain shelters in a cave and gathering dry sticks and piling a swiftly dying flame lies down beside the fire and makes his supper. And in summer the hunter must shun the fiery assault and heat of the sun : at earliest dawn I bid him come to his or=ύπολήνιον, Lat. lacus, a sense which τριπτήρ also has (πολλὰ σημαίνει τοῦνομα E.M.), cf. Poll. x. 130 τριπτήρ, ὁ κρατήρ, εἰς ὃν ἀπορρεῖ τοῦλαιον ἄλλὰ καὶ ληνὸς καὶ ύπολήνιον. Our rendering, reached independently, agrees with the Lat. version of D. Peifer (1555) : Cum premit arcta nimis sibi toreularia botrus Gaudens. Schn.'s βότρυν assumes that the subject to χαλρεῖ is γεωργός. If that is right, then the construction of ἐπιλήνια is difficult. Does it go with θλίβων or χαλρεῖ? The schol. taking βότρυς as acc. pl. has ἐπὶ λήνια· ἐπὶ τὰς πίλας (i.e. Lat. pilas, presses). Euteen. has ἀμπέλων δὲ βότρυς ἀπαλοῖς ποσὶ θλιβόμενος σκιρτάν παρασκενάζει τὰ ἐπιλήνια. We hear of songs of the wine-press : Ath. 199 a ἐπάτουν δὲ έξηκοντα Σάτυροι πρὸς αὐλὸν ἔδοντες μέλος ἐπιλήνιον ; Anacreout. 57. 9 (Hiller) ἐπιληνίοισιν ὕμνοις ; Poll. iv. 55 (cf. ib. 53) ἐπιλήνιον αἴδημα ἐπὶ βοτρύων θλιβομένων ; and of a dance, Long. Daph. and Ch. ii. 36 Δρύας δὲ ἀναστὰς καὶ κελεύσας συρίττειν Διονυσιακὸν μέλος ἐπιλήνιον αὐτοῖς δρχησιν ὠρχήσατο. But ἐπιλήνια χαίρειν would be a very bold expression.

task, when in the morning the countrymen with well-fashioned stilt guide the earth-cutting plough behind the steers beneath the pole ; or again at evening when the sun slopes ^a his team toward the West ; when herdsmen command their herds what time they travel homeward to their folds, heavy of breast and swollen of udder : and, bounding incontinently from the stone-built steading, all leap about their beloved mothers—the bright-eyed calves about the large-eyed cows, the lambs about the bleating horned ewes, the kids about the bleating goats, and about the brood mares their swift foals.

And these are the weapons ^b of the glorious chase which the stalwart hunters should carry to hill and wood, these their arms breathing of the blood of beasts : purse-nets ^c and well-twisted withes and long sweep-net ^d and hayes and net-props ^e and grievous fettering nooses, three-pronged spear, broad-headed hunting lance,^f hare-stick ^g and stakes and swift winged or purse (the “ women’s ridicules ” of Noah Claypole, Oliver Twist, c. 42). Such would I have the horse to be who goes to the fierce warfare with wild beasts, a spirited helper, warlike and strong. Such are the Tuscan horses and the Armenian and the Achaean and the famous Cappadocian horses which dwell in front of Taurus.ⁱ A marvel have I seen among the Cappadocian horses; so long as they have their foal teeth in their mouth and are milk-fed, they are weakling, but as they grow older, they become swifter. Those are the horses which thou shouldst array for manly war and against fierce wild beasts; for they are very brave to face arms and break the serried phalanx and contend against warlike wild beasts. How^a in the battle doth the war-horse^b hearken to the martial note of the long trumpet that makes the din of conflict ! How with unwinking^c eyes doth he look upon the dense array of armed warriors, the gleaming bronze, the flashing sword ! He hath learned also when it behoves him to stand and anon to charge ; and he hath learned to hearken to the watchword of mighty captains. Often, too, he calmly brings nigh to the towers the warfare^d of men with soaring shields, when athwart the heads of men shield presses upon shield, what time they are fain to sack the city of the enemy and fashion aloft a plain with their shields of sevenfold hides, daedal and dense and many-bossed ; in front the sunlight glances from the bronze and straightway behind great space of sky lightens with rays refracted. To horses beyond all mortal creatures cunning Nature has given a subtle mind and heart. Always they know their own dear charioteer and they neigh when they see their glorious rider and greatly mourn^e their comrade when he falls in war. Ere now in battle a horse has burst the bonds of silence and overleapt

And, ye blessed Gods, without their knowledge he wrought his wickedness and there was fulfilled a union monstrous and abominable and most abhorred of horses, like that dread marriage that was made of old among men, the Cadmean bridal of the wanderer Oedipus.^a But when they were made naked and knew their sin, and in sorrow and with eyes askance looked one on the other, the unhappy mother on her dishonoured son, and he anon, victim of a terrible and evil union, upon his poor unmothered^b mother, they leapt on high, snorting terribly, and brake their bonds and went neighing loudly as if they were calling the blessed gods to witness their evil plight and cursing him who contrived their woeful union ; and at last, rushing wildly in their grief, they dashed their foreheads against the rocks and brake the bones and took away their light of life, self-slain, leaning their heads on one another. So report proclaims the fame of the horses of former days. Now of all the breeds of horses that the infinite earth nourishes most swift are the Sicilian,^c which dwell in Lilybaeum^d and where the three-peaked hill that covers Enceladus,^e as the thunderbolt belches forth in beams reaching to the sky, discharges the eternal fire of Sicilian Aetna. Fleeter than the Sicilian are by the streams of Euphrates the Armenian and Parthian^f horses of flowing mane. Yet the Parthian horses are greatly excelled by the Iberian,^g which gallop over the plains with swifter feet. With them might vie only the eagle^a speeding over the vales of air, or the hawk hastening with long pinions spread, or the dolphin gliding over the grey waves. So fleet are the Iberian horses of wind-swift feet ; but they are small and weak of spirit and unvaliant of heart and in a few furlongs are found wanting^b in speed ; and though clothed in fair form and glorious shape, yet the hoof is lacking in strength, bred to soft ground and broad. The dappled breed of Moorish horses are far the best of all for extended courses and laborious toil. And next to these for accomplishing a long course come the Libyan horses, even those which dwell in many-pebbled Cyrene. Both are of similar type, save only that the strong Libyan horses are larger to look at ; but these latter are long of body, having in their sides more space of broad rib than others, and hence are stouter to look at and superior in a charge and good at enduring the fiery force of the sun and the keen assault of noontide thirst. The Tuscan horses and the immense Cretan breeds are both swift in running and long of body. The Sicilian are swifter than the Moorish horses, while the Parthian are swifter than the Sicilian, grey-eyed^c also and eminently handsome, and they alone abide^d the loud roar of the lion. For verily against different wild beasts different breeds of horses are fitting in many cases, as the eyes declare. Against the deer of spotted feet thou shouldst array dark-eyed horses ; blue-

xxi. 252) ; the dolphin (Pind. P. ii. 51, N. vi. 72) ; the hawk (Hom. Il. xv. 237, Od. xiii. 86) are types of swiftness.

^b But Nemes. 253 says Spanish horses “valent longos intendere cursus” ; Mart. i. 49, xiv. 199.

^c χαροποι may here mean merely “bright-eyed.” For the sense of the word when applied to colour see note on 308.

^a γλαυκός and χαροπός are not easy to distinguish. Cf. A. 491 b 34 ὁφθαλμοῦ δὲ τὸ μὲν λευκὸν ὅμοιον ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολὺ πᾶσιν, τὸ δὲ καλούμενον μέλαν διαφέρει· τοῖς μὲν γάρ ἔστι μέλαν, τοῖς δὲ σφύδρα γλαυκόν, τοῖς δὲ χαροπόν, ἐνίοις δὲ αἰγωπόν; Hom. Od. xi. 611 χαροποὶ λέοντες but γλαυκιών of lion Il. xx. 172. Perhaps if we call γλ. "greyish-blue" and χαρ. "bluish-grey," we shall be nearly right.

^b Or Nisaean: famous breed of horses from the Nesaean plain in Media: Steph. B. s. Νησαῖον πεδίον, ἀφ' οὗ παρὰ Μήδοις οἱ Νησαῖοι ἵπποι; Herod. iii. 106, vii. 40; Strab.

eyed^a against bears ; tawny-eyed against leopards ; fiery and flaming against swine ; brilliant and grey of eye against the grey-eyed lion. In beauty the most excellent of all horses is the Nesaeans,^b which wealthy kings drive ; beautiful to behold, gentle to ride and obedient to the bit, small of head but shaggy-maned, glorying in the yellow locks on either side his neck.

Yet another lovely breed thou mayst see, the dappled conspicuous breed which men call the Orynx,^c either because they flourish on the grassy hills (οὐρεσιν), or because they are very eager to mate (όπούειν) with their females. In the case of the Orynxes there are two species of many-patterned beauty. One species are inscribed on neck and broad hairy back with a series of long stripes, even as the swift tigers, the offspring of rapid Zephyrus.^d The others are adorned all about with densely set round spots, like those of leopards ; this species while they are still but baby foals, are tattooed by skilful men, who brand their long hair with the flaming bronze. And oftentimes men have contrived other subtle devices for inscribing^e the foal while yet

^b Stat. S. v. 1. 213 Palaestini simul Hebraeique liquores. It is not to be assumed that the perfume meant is one native to Palestine (which is not rich in aromatic shrubs). The spices and perfumes of the Far East came to Europe in his mother's womb. O what^a a heart, what a mind have mortal men! They do as they list; they make horses of varied colours while yet enveloped in the milky mother's loins. What time the mating impulse seizes the mare and she abides the approach of the glorious high-spirited horse, then they cunningly adorn the beautiful sire. All about they inscribe all his body with spots of colour and to his bride they lead him, glorying in his beauty. Even as some youth, arrayed by the bridal women in white robes and purple flowers and breathing of the perfume of Palestine,^b steps into the bridal chamber singing the marriage song, so while the hasting horse neighs his bridal song, long time in front of his bride they stay her glorious spouse, foaming in his eagerness; and late and at last they let him go to satisfy his desire. And the mare conceives and bears a many-patterned foal, having received in her womb the fertile seed of her spouse, but in her eyes his many-coloured form. Such devices have they also with cunning wits contrived whose business is with the reed, even the fowlers, when they variegate the young of doves. For when the swift doves mate and mingle mouths^c with their deep-noted spouses, then the breeder of tame birds contrives a glorious device. Near the hen-birds he puts many vari-coloured purple cloths; and they, beholding them with eyes askant are gladdened in their hearts and produce sea-purple children. Nay, even so also by way of Palestine and Syria (Diod. iii. 41) and are generally called indifferently Syrian (Propert. iii. 5. 14; Tibull. iii. 4. 28, iii. 6. 63; Hor. C. ii. 7. 8; Catull. vi. 8) or Assyrian (Hor. C. ii. 11. 16; Catull. lxviii. 143; Verg. E. iv. 25; Tibull. i. 3. 7, iii. 2. 23).

If thou shouldst desire to mix two breeds, then first of all mate^e the dogs in spring^f; for in spring chiefly the works of love possess the hearts of wild beasts and dogs and deadly snakes and the fowls of the air and the finny creatures of the sea. In spring the serpent, foul with angry venom, comes to the shore to meet his sea bride^g; in spring all the deep rings with love and the calm sea^h foams with fishes mating; in spring the male pigeon pursues the female; horses assail the pasturing mares and bulls lust after the cows of the field; in spring the rams of crooked horn mount the ewes and fiery wild boars mate with the sows, the he-goats the shaggy females; yes, and mortals also in spring are more prone to desire; for in spring the spell of Love is heavy upon all.

In mating the tribes of dogs take heed that the breeds are fit and right suitable for one another. Mate Arcadian with Elean, Cretan with Paeonian, Carian with Thracian, Tuscanⁱ breed with Laconian; put a Sarmatian sire with an Iberian dam. So shall you mix the breeds aright; but far best of all it is that the breeds should remain pure, and those all hunters judge best. Those breeds are without number,^a and the form and type of them should be approximately^b these. The body^c should be long and strong and adequate; the head^d light and with good eyes^e; the eyes should be dark of sheen; the saw-toothed mouth should be long; the ears^f that crown the head should be small and furnished with membranes; the neck^g long and under it the breast^h strong and broad; the front legsⁱ should be shorter than the hinder; the shanks^j should be straight, thin, and long; the shoulder-blades^k should be broad; the row of ribs^l sloping obliquely; the haunches^m well-fleshed but not fat; and behind the far-shadowing tailⁿ should be stiff and prominent. like unto high-crested mountain peaks. Somewhat flat-nosed of face they are, and dread are their bended brows above and fiery their eyes, flashing with grey^a light ; all their hide is shaggy, the body strong, the back broad. They are not swift, but they have abundant spirit and genuine strength unspeakable and dauntless courage. Array then for the hunt such breeds of warlike dogs, which put to flight all manner of beasts. But as to colour,^b both white and black are bad exceedingly ; for they are not readily able to bear the might of the sun nor the rage of the snowy winter season. Among all dogs those are the best whose colour is like that of ravenous wild beasts, sheep-slaying wolves or wind-swift tigers or foxes and swift leopards, or those which have the colour of Demeter's^c yellow corn ; for these are very swift and strong.

If now prudent dog-breeding is thy care, never suckle whelps on the fresh breast of goats or sheep nor domestic dogs^d—for they will be sluggish and feeble and heavy—but on the breast of deer or tame lioness or gazelle or she-wolf that roams by night ; for so shalt thou make them strong and swift exceedingly, like unto their milky foster-mothers themselves.

E. viii. 107), Latinum ferox, Graecum λάκων, Latinum celer: vel femina, ut sunt Graeca σπουδή, ἀλκή, ρώμη (these three from Xen.), Latina lupa (cf. Lycisca: Verg. E. viii. 18), cerra, tigris.

^b Xenophon, C. 8, gives instructions for hunting hares in

To the young whelps give names that are short ^a and swiftly spoken that they may hear a command swiftly. And from their whelphood let them be acquainted with the mighty horses of the hunt and friendly and familiar with all men and hostile only to wild beasts. Neither let them be prone to bark ; for silence is the rule for hunters and above all for trackers.

Tracking the dim trail is of two sorts, by men and by dogs. Men, cunning of counsel, divine and mark the trail by the eyes ; dogs trace all tracks by the nostrils. Now for men winter ^b is a favourable season and they track the quarry with untroubled eyes, since every mark is written in the snow to see and the likeness of the foot remains imprinted in the mud. For dogs spring ^c is hostile but autumn kindly ; for in spring the grassy earth is many-scented and over-full of herbs and flowers, and all around the fair-crowned meadows without tillage are purple, while the tilled fields destroy all the scent which is the ambassadress to the keen-nosed tracking dogs. But in autumn, ^d rich in fruit and sweet with grapes, winter (cf. Bik. p. 14 On en fait la chasse presque toute l'année, mais surtout en hiver) : κύνας μὲν οὖν οὐδὲν δεῖ ἔχοντα ἔξιέναι ἐπὶ τὴν θήραν ταύτην. ἡ γὰρ χιῶν καὶ τῶν κυνῶν τὰς ἄννας, τοὺς πόδας, τὴν ὀσμὴν τοῦ λαγῶν ἀφανίζει διὰ τὸ ὑπέρπταγες· λαβόντα δὲ τὰ δίκτυα μετ' ἀλλου ἐλθόντα πρὸς τὰ δρη ταριέναι ἀπὸ τῶν ἔργων, καὶ ἐπειδάν λάβῃ τὰ ἰχνη, πορεύεσθαι κατὰ ταῦτα. Cf. ib. 5. 1 ff.

^e Xen. C. 5. 5 τὸ δὲ ἔαρ κεκραμένον τῇ ὥρᾳ καλῶς παρέχει τὰ ἰχνη, λαμπρά, πλὴν εἰ τι ἡ γῆ ἔξανθούσα βλάπτει τὰς κύνας εἰς τὸ αὐτὸ συμμιγνύοντα τῶν ἀνθῶν τὰς ὀσμάς. Cf. Poll. v. 49.

^f Xen. C. 5. 5 τοῦ δὲ μετοπώρου καθαρά (sc. τὰ ἰχνη). ὅσα γὰρ ἡ γῆ φέρει, τὰ μὲν ἡμερα συγκεκόμισται, τὰ δὲ ἄγρια γῆρα διαλέλυται· ὥστε οὐ παραλυπούσι τῶν καρπῶν αἱ ὀσμαὶ εἰς ταῦτα φερόμεναι. Cf. Poll. v. 49.

grass and herbs and flowers wax old and the scent of the wild beasts remains naked for the hounds.

There is one valiant breed of tracking dogs, small indeed but as worthy as large dogs to be the theme of song; bred by the wild tribes of the painted^a Britons and called by the name of Agassaeus.^b Their size is like that of the weak and greedy domestic table dog^c: round, very lean, shaggy of hair, dull of eye, it has its feet armed with grievous claws and its mouth sharp with close-set venomous tushes. With its nose especially the Agassian dog is most excellent and in tracking it is best of all; for it is very clever at finding the track of things that walk the earth but skilful too to mark the airy scent.

When some hunter desires to make trial of his dogs, he carries in his hands before the high gates a hare, dead or alive, and walks forward on a devious path, now pursuing a straight course, now aslant, left and right twining his crooked way; but when he has come very far from the city and the gates, then he digs a trench and buries the hare. Returning back to the city, he straightway brings nigh the path the cunning dog ; and immediately it is excited and snorts at the scent of the hare, and seeks the track upon the ground, but for all its eagerness is not able to find it and roams about in great distress. Even as when a girl in the tenth lunar month, smitten by the birth-pangs of her first child, undoes her hair and undoes the drapery of her breasts and, poor girl, without tunic and without snood, roams everywhere about the house, and in her anguish now goes to the hall and anon rushes to her bed, and sometimes throws herself in the dust and mars her rosy cheeks ; so the dog, distressed by devouring grief, rushes this way and that and searches every stone in turn and every knoll and every path and trees and garden vines and dykes and threshing-floors. And when at last he hits the airy trail, he gives tongue and whines for joy ; even as the little calves leap about the uddered cows, so the dog rejoices exceedingly, and in haste he winds his way over the mazy fields ; nor couldst thou lead him astray, even if thou shouldst then drive him very far, but he runs straight on, holding steadfastly to the sweet scent, until he reaches the end of his labour and to his goal. But if thou wert to array him against the hare difficult of capture, stealthily he draws nigh, planting step on step, hiding low under vines or stubble, even as the robber thief of kids who, watching near at hand the sleeping shepherd, quietly steals upon the fold. But when he approaches the covert of the hare, swiftly he springs, like an arrow from the bow or like the hissing snake which some harvester or ploughman has disturbed when lying quietly in front of his venomous lair. So the dog gives tongue and springs ; and if he hit his quarry, easily he will overcome him with his sharp claws and take his great load in his mouth and go to meet his master : swiftly he carries his burden but labouring and heavy-laden he draws near. As the wain brings from the cornfield the fruits of harvest and comes to the steading laden with wheat and the rustics when they see it rush forth together to meet it in front of the yard ; one presses on the wheels, another on the frame, another on the axle to help the oxen ; and when they come into the yard they unstrap the pole and the sweating steers have respite from their toil, and the heart of the swinked teamster rejoices exceedingly ; even so the dog comes bringing his burden in his mouth. And the swift hunter meets him joyfully and lifting both high from mother earth he puts in his bosom^a both the beast and the dog himself that slew the beast.

CYNEGETICA, OR THE CHASE

II

COME now, daughter of Zeus, fair-ankled Phoebe, maid of the golden snood, twin birth with Apollo, declare, I pray thee, who among men and mighty heroes received at thy hands the glorious devices of the chase.

By the foot of windy Pholoe^a did savage tribes, half-beast half-men, human to the waist but from the waist horses, invent the chase for pastime after the banquet.^b Among men it was invented first by him who cut off the Gorgon's head, even Perseus,^c the son of golden Zeus; howbeit he soared on the swift wings^d of his feet to capture Hares and Jackals and the tribe of wild Goats and swift Gazelles and the breeds of Oryx and the high-headed dappled Deer themselves. Hunting on horseback did Castor, bringer of light,^e discover; and some beasts he slew by straight hurling of his javelin to the mark; others he pursued on swift horses and put them to bay^f in the noontide chase. Saw-toothed^g dogs were first arrayed for battle with wild beasts by Polydeuces^a of Lacedaemon, son of Zeus ; for he both slew baleful men in the battle of the fists and overcame spotted wild beasts with swift hounds. Pre-eminent in close combat on the hills shone the son of Oeneus, warlike Meleager.^b Nets again and nooses and curving hayes did Hippolytus^c first reveal to hunting men. Winged death for wild beasts did Atalanta^d invent, the glorious daughter of Schoeneus, the maiden huntress of the Boar. And snaring by night, the guileful hunting of the dark, crafty Orion^e first discovered. These were the mighty leaders of the chase in former days. But afterward the keen passion seized many ; for none who has once been smitten by the charms of the delightful hunt would ever willingly forsake it again : he is held by wondrous bonds. How sweet the sleep upon the flowers in springtime ; how sweet in summer the low couch in some cave ; what delight for hunters to break their fast amid the rocks and what joy attends them when they cull for themselves the flower of honied fruit ; and the cold clear water flowing from a grotto—what a draft for a weary man and how sweet a bath ; and in the woods what grateful gifts in pleasant baskets are brought by shepherds watching by their flocks !

But come now let us sing first the very jealous race of Bulls and tell of the tremendous feud which above others they wage with utter fury over their mating. One Bull is monarch of a herd and easily supreme, and he rules the lesser Bulls and females ; the herd quake before their mighty horned leader, and the cows of the field too tremble at their own lord in his anger when he bellows. But when a Bull separates from the herd ^a and arching his mighty neck comes against another all alone, he too being lord and master of his own, then between the twain arises violent war. First face to face they glare at one another and greatly quiver with wildly seething wrath and breathe fiery breath and tear up the earth ^b with their feet, even as if they were wrestlers dusting themselves ^c for the fray. They challenge from either side, loudly bellowing the cry of battle ; and when they have sounded the trumpet for grievous combat, incontinently they charge and straightway with their horns each wounds in turn all the body of the other. Even as in battle upon the deep when the sea War-god raises strife, two ships, splendidly flashing with serried warriors face to face, clash with opposing prows front to front, sped by the violent wind and the hands of the sailors ; and amid brazen armour rings the din of men and the noise of crashing ships, and the whole sea seethes and groans ;

even in such wise the din of the Bulls ascends to heaven, as they smite amain and are smitten with their horns, until one wins the dear and doubtful victory. But the vanquished ^a cannot endure the yoke of slavery. Ashamed and groaning heavily he goes unto a shady wood and alone among the rocks as the seasons circle round he pastures, retired among the thickets of the hill, as an athlete in training.^b And when he beholds his debated power and strength have waxed mighty,^c he straightway lifts up his voice upon the mountains ; and the other answers ; and therewith the forest resounds. But when he takes good heart for his mightier cry, then straightway from the hills he comes to meet his foe and easily overcomes him. For he has made his body fit by his pasture in the forest far from that lust of sex which saps the strength.^d

it was a deep-drawing ship ^a that was going upon the land. Yet are they kindly of spirit and familiar with men, and whatsoever mortals bid them, they obey with mildness.

The Phrygian Bulls are notable in colour, yellow and of the hue of fire. The neck is deeply fleshed, and high and lofty are the coiled curls upon their heads. Strange is the nature of their horns ; for these are not fast fixed upon the powerful head, but they move them ^b to and fro on either side.

The Aonian^c Bulls do not divide the hoof; a dappled breed they are and with a single horn—a dread horn which they project aloft from the midst of the forehead.

The Armenian Bulls have two horns, indeed, but these curved of form, a dread bane with their backward-bent points.

The Syrian Bulls, the breed of the Chersonese,^d pasture about high well-builded Pella ; tawny, strong, great-hearted, broad of brow, dwellers of the field, powerful, valiant of horn, wild of spirit, loud-bellowing, fierce, jealous, abundant of beard, yet they are not weighed down with fat and flesh of body, nor again are they lean and weak ; so tempered are the gifts they have from heaven—at once swift to run and strong to fight. These are they which report said Heracles, the mighty son of Zeus, when fulfilling delayed the birth of Heracles. When Heracles in his

^c See Introd. p. xix. This myth seems to be found only here, and Archippus, Diocleum, and Emblonus are nowhere

his labours, drove of old from Erytheia,^a what time he fought with Geryoneus beside the Ocean and slew him amid the crags ; since he was doomed to fulfil yet another labour, not for Hera nor at the behest of Eurystheus,^b but for his comrade Archippus,^c lord of holy Pella. For aforetime all the plain by the foot of Emblonus was flooded ; since evermore in great volume rushed Orontes in his eagerness, forgetting the sea and burning with desire of the dark-eyed nymph, the daughter of Ocean. He lingered amid the heights and he covered the fertile earth, unwilling to forgo his hopeless love of Meliboea. With mountains on either side was he encircled round, mountains that on either hand leaned their heads together. From the East came the lofty form of Diocleum, and from the West the left horn of Emblonus, and in the midst himself raging in the plains, ever waxing and drawing nigh the walls, flooding with his waters that mainland at once and island,^d mine own city. Therefore was the son of Zeus destined straightway with club and else mentioned. mighty hands to apportion their water unto each, and to give separate course from the plain for the waters of the fair-tressed lake and the fair-flowing river. And he wrought his mighty labour, when he cut the girdle of the encircling hills and undid their stony bonds, and sent the river belching to its mouth, surging incontinent and wildly murmuring, and guided it toward the shores. And loudly roared the deep sea, and the mighty body of the Syrian shore echoed to the din. Not with such violent flood descend those contrary-travelling rivers on either side the echoing sea : here Ister,^a cleaving the white barriers of the North through Scythia, roars loudly everywhere, trailing amid precipices and water-smitten heights ; while on the other hand the sounding sea trembles at the holy stream of Egypt^b when from Libya it breaks about it. So the mighty river Orontes made a noise of dread bellowing about the shores ; and mightily roared the headlands when they received within their bosom the swell of the new-come sea ; and the black and fertile earth took heart again, arisen from the waves, a new plain of Heracles. And to this day the fields flourish everywhere with corn and everywhere the works of oxen are heavy on the prosperous threshing-floors around the Memnonian shrine, where the Assyrian dwellers mourn for Memnon,^c the glorious son of the Morning, whom, when he came to help the sons of Priam, the doughty husband of Deidameia^d swiftly slew. ^b Bos bonasus (Bison europaeus), the Wisent or European Bison, now exterminated in Lithuania, where a herd was maintained by the Tsar of Russia, and probably in the Caucasus also. Aristotle describes it under the name βόνασος 630 a 18 ff.; cf. 498 b 28; 506 b 30. In 630 a 20 he says it is called by the Paeonians μόναπος. Cf. A. beit the spacious glories of our fatherland we shall sing in due order with sweet Pimplean^a song ; now I turn back to sing of glorious hunting.

There is a terrible breed of deadly Bulls which they call Bisons,^b since they are natives of Bistonian^c Thrace. And they have forms of this sort. Over their shoulders they have bristling hair on their fleshy necks as also about their tender jaws ; conspicuous form they have, even as the king of beasts, the shaggy, tawny, fierce-eyed Lion. Sharp are the curved points of their horns, like unto bent hooks of bronze ; but the points of their hateful horns, unlike those of other cattle, incline athwart to face one another,^d and their deadly daggers are sloped backwards and look up to the sky. Therefore when they come upon and attack any man or wild beast, they lift their victim on high. Their tongue is narrow, but exceeding rough, even as the device of iron for devouring iron ; and with the tongue they draw blood from the flesh and lick it.

Moreover the earth breeds the race of swift-footed cornibus ita in se flexis ut non sint utilia pugnae ; cf. Solin. xl. 10. Pausan. x. 13 gives an account of the capture of the Paeonian Bison by means of a pit. The Bison with short stout horns is not to be confounded with the Aurochs, Bos taurus (B. primigenius), the Latin urus : Caes. B.G. vi. 28 ; Verg. G. ii. 374, iii. 532 ; Macrob. vi. 4. 23, of which the last was killed in Poland in 1627. Bison and urus are mentioned together Plin. viii. 38 iubatos bisontes excellentique et vi et velocitate uros ; Senec. Hipp. 64 f. villosi terga bisontes Latisque feri cornibus uri.

^a ἔλαφος is (1) specifically the Red Deer, Cervus elaphus, (2) generically Deer, and is used both of Stag and Hind.

^b " Instances too sometimes occur of a stag being found swimming narrow parts of the Moray Firth; a solitary deer who probably has been driven by dogs from his usual haunts, till frightened and bewildered he has wandered at random and, at last, coming to the shore, has swum boldly out, attracted by the appearance of the woods on the opposite side," St. John, N. H. and Sport in Moray, p. 240; cf. Wild Sports and N. H. of the Highlands, p. 23; A.P. ix. 275 τὴν δὲ ταχεῖαν εἰν ἀλὶ καὶ χαροπῶς κύμασιν εἴλ' Ἐλαφον.

^c Cf. G. White, N. H. of Selborne, Letter xiv. (March 12, 1768): " If some curious gentleman would procure the head of a fallow-deer, and have it dissected, he would find it furnished with two spiracula, or breathing-places, besides the nostrils; probably analogous to the puncta lacrimalia in the human head. When deer are thirsty they plunge their noses, like some horses, very deep under water while in the act of drinking, and continue them in that situation for a considerable time; but to obviate any inconvenience, they can open two vents, one at the inner corner of each eye, having a communication with the nose. Here seems to be an extraordinary provision of nature worthy our attention; and which has not, that I know of, been noticed by any naturalist. For it looks as if these creatures would not be suffocated, though both their mouths and nostrils were stopped. This curious formation of the head may be of singular service to beasts of chase, by affording them free respiration ; and no doubt these additional nostrils are thrown open when they are hard run. . . . Oppian, the Greek poet, by the following line [i.e. 181] seems to have had some notion that stags have four spiracula." Dr. James Ritchie, Royal Scottish Museum, Edinburgh, writes : "The spiracula of deer, or, as they are now called, the sub-orbital glands, vary a great deal in their development in different species of deer, but in many cases the glands seem to be of very considerable importance, lying in specially deep depressions in the skull. The glands secrete a waxy material, and I have seen this oozing in masses, even after red deer had been dead for several days. The secretion is most active during the pairing season, and there are a number of observations showing that deer seem deliberately to rub the secretion upon trees and stones. The suggestion has been made that this is in order to convey the scent of their passing, and this might be the effect even if we attribute the rubbing simply to a desire to get rid of the annoyance of surplus secretion. . . . The sub-orbital gland has a sort of contractile lip which, closed at one time, may at another be so pulled back that the inner surface is everted and there is exposed the large cavity of the gland lined with pink mucous membrane. The action and the appearance are quite enough to suggest similarity with the movement and appearance of the nostrils, but of course there is no sort of connexion between the sub-orbital glands and the air-passages."

Stags,^a goodly of horn, large of eye, handsome, of dappled back, spotted, conspicuous, river-swimming,^b lofty of head, fat of chine and lean of shank ; the neck is weak and the tail again is very small ; the nostrils are fourfold,^c four passages for the breath ; the heart is weak and the spirit within cowardly^d ; and the pointed horns that rise so high are but dummies ; for they will never with their heads contend against strong wild beasts nor fierce dogs, nor even the timid hare of furry legs.

But there is rough passion among Stags and much venery,^a and a heart that burns for mating all the day, even as have the lustful fighting cocks^b and all the feathered birds of flowery plumage. They have hidden within their loins under the very belly twin ducts. If one cut these out, straightway he makes the animal effeminate, and from its head falls away all the daedal many-branched growth of sharp horns.^c But the manner of their mating^d is not after the custom of other beasts, but strange are the passions that possess them. Not standing in the pastoral valleys nor lying on the flowery grass upon the ground do the Stags consort with the female deer, but the hind runs and the Stag running with swift feet overtakes her and seizes the fugitive and embraces her for his bride. But not even so does he persuade her. Carrying her mate upon her back she flees with all her might, having a heart altogether implacable. But he following swiftly on two feet forgoes not his desire but accomplishes the rites of union. Howbeit, when afterward with the circling of the moons the female brings forth her young, she

That they are associated with the reproductive function is shown by their being shed after the period of rut, the destruction of the velvet at that period, and also by the effect upon the horns which any injury to the reproductive glands produces," Camb. avoids ^a the track of men, because the paths of mortals are profane to wild beasts.

Above all wild beasts the Stags of goodly horn plume themselves upon their beauty, having a rich and various growth of horn. Indeed when their branching horns in due season fall off, they dig a trench in the ground and bury them,^b lest someone chance upon them in the furrow and take them, and themselves hide^c in the depths of the dense thickets, ashamed that wild beasts should behold thus naked their heads that aforetime soared so high.

helm of a ship. Another behind rests on his back his neck and head and so travels with him in his seafaring. And so in turn, one supporting another, they plough the sea. But when weariness overtakes the foremost swimmer, he leaves his rank and goes to the end of the line and resting on another takes a little respite from his toil, while another takes the helm and journeys over the deep. And all the swimmers leading in turn, they row the dark water with their feet as with oars, and hold aloft the varied beauty of their horns, submitting them, like the sails of a ship, to the breezes.

All the race of Snakes and Deer wage always bitter feud^a with one another, and everywhere in the mountain glens the Deer seeks out the bold serpent. But when he sees the snaky trail woven with long coils, greatly exulting he draws nigh to the lair and puts his nostrils to the hole, with violent breath drawing the deadly reptile to battle. And the compelling blast hales him, very loth to fight, from the depth of his lair. For straightway the venomous beast beholds his foe and raises high in the air his baleful neck and bares his white teeth, bristling sharp, and snaps his jaws, blowing and hissing fast. And immediately in his turn the Deer, like one who smiles, rends with his mouth the vainly struggling foe, and, while he writhes about his knees and neck, devours him amain. And on the ground are shed many remains, quivering and writhing in death.

When a Stag lies down alone on the sandy hills, straightway upon him from every side rush the hostile swarm of Snakes beyond number and the hateful venomous ranks. In his hide they fix their bitter teeth, swarming around about all the limbs of the Stag. Some devote themselves to his head above and fix their teeth in brow and forehead ; others rend with their mouths his slender neck and breast and his flanks and belly ; others again cling to his ribs on either side ; others feed on his thighs and back above ; one here, one there, with deadly impalement they hang about him. And he, full of all manner of pain, first is fain to escape on swift feet, but he has not the strength ; such an infinite crowd of cruel spotted snakes besets him. Then, oppressed by grievous constraint, he makes a stand and with his jaws he rends the infinite hostile tribes, bellowing the while for pain ; and wheeling this way and that he makes havoc of the reptile race which make no endeavour to escape. Yet they do not let go their hold, but abide steadfast unto death, having a relentless mind and a heart not to be turned. an endless bloody stream, and the limbs and joints of the beasts half-devoured quiver upon the ground ; others again upon his ribs he crushes half-dead ; for even in death they still keep hold with their strong teeth and, clinging to his hide, their mere heads still groan. But he, knowing the gift that he hath gotten from Heaven, seeks everywhere for the dark stream of a river. Therefrom he kills crabs ^a with his jaws and so gets a self-taught remedy for his painful woe ; and speedily the remnants of the cruel beasts fall from his hide of their own motion beside his feet, and the wounds of their teeth on either side close up.

The Stag, moreover, lives a long time,^b and of a truth men say that he lives four lives of a crow.^c

Others again men call Broad-horns.^d They are altogether deer but they carry aloft such nature of horns as the name of the beast declares.

The evidence is confusing but there seems reason to think that δορκάς was used in two senses, (1)=Gazelle, (2)=Roe Deer; cf. Other beasts in the woods they call Iorcus.^a These also have the form of a deer, but on their back they have a hide, all various with spots, like the marks that twinkle upon the skin of the wild Leopards.

The Antelope^b again is less in stature than the Broad-horn: less than the Broad-horn but far mightier than the Gazelle: bright of eye, lovely in colour, cheerful of aspect. Straight from the head spring the long branches of its horns but aloft they bend again toward the back with curved points. Above all others doth this race love its own home and its accustomed lair and its dear dwelling in the glades. Even if hunters bind it with twisted ropes and carry it straightway to other regions and far away in the glens leave it there to its freedom, easily doth it come to the sweet home where it used to dwell and endures not to wander as a stranger amid aliens. Not then to men alone is their native land dear, but even in the hearts of the dappled wild beasts is instilled a desire of home.

Furthermore we all know the conspicuous tribes of the most swift^c Gazelles,^d their beauty alike and their stature and their strength. The lustful^e Partridges,^a fiery of eye and speckled of neck, make pact of friendship with the Gazelles^b in the vales and are familiar with them and dwell with them and have their nests near them and do not range apart from them. Verily it may well be that afterward they reap bitter fruit of their companionship and laughterless profit of their friendship, when guileful men contrive a cunning device against the hapless creatures, setting the Partridges to decoy their friends the Gazelles and, in turn, setting the Gazelles in like manner to decoy their comrades the Partridges.

Again there are the wild tribes of Goats and Sheep. These are not much larger than our Sheep and shaggy Goats, but they are swift to run and strong to fight, armed as their heads are with twisted horns. The strength, moreover, of the Sheep lies in their terrible foreheads. Many a time in the woods they charge and lay rushing Boars writhing on the ground. Sometimes also they rush upon one another and do battle, and a mighty din reaches unto heaven. And it is not lawful for them to shun the foe, but unshakable constraint is upon them either to win the victory one over another or to lie dead: such strife arises between them.

whence again the channel goes straight to the very heart and lungs. If one pours wax about the horns of the wild Goat, he blocks the paths of its life and the channels of its breath.

Notable is the care which the dam among these takes for her tender young and which the children take for their mother in her old age. And even as among men, when a parent is fettered in the grievous bonds of old age—heavy of foot, crooked of limb, feeble of hand, palsied of body, dim of eye—his children cherish and attend him with utmost heed, repaying the care of their laborious rearing : so do the young of the Goats care for their dear parents in their old age, when sorrowful bonds fetter their limbs. They cull with their mouths and proffer them dewy food and flowery, and for drink they bring them dark water which they draw from the river with their lips, while with their tongues they tend and cleanse all their body. Didst thou but take the mother alone in a snare, straightway thou mightst take the young lambs with thy hands. For thou wouldest think that she was driving away her children with her words, entreating them afar with such bleatings as these : “ Flee, children dear, the cruel hunters, lest ye be slain and make me your poor mother a mother no more ! ” Such words thou wouldest think she spoke, while they, standing before her, first sing, thou wouldest imagine, a mournful dirge about their mother, and then, breaking forth in bleating, speak in human accents and as if they used the speech of men and like as if they prayed, utter from their lips such language as this : “ In the name of Zeus we pray thee, in the name of the Archer Maid herself, release to us our dear mother,

But when they see that thy heart is altogether inexorable,—how great their regard, how great their love for their parents!—they come to bondage of their own accord and of their own motion pass the bourne.

Yellow Sheep there are in the bounds of utmost Crete, in the low land of Gortyn—Sheep with four horns; and bright wool is wreathed about their flesh—abundant wool but not soft: so rugged is it that it might compare with the roughest hair of Goats, not with the wool of Sheep.

Such yellow-coloured form has also the brilliant Subus,^a but no longer shaggy nor again furnished with four horns but with two strong ones above amplest forehead. Amphibious too is the Subus; for he also walks upon the land; but when he travels to the deep and ploughs the swift waves, then a great company of fishes attends him and travels the sea along with him; and they lick his limbs and rejoice in their horned friend, the Subus of tender body. Melanurus^a and the Needle-fish^b and the Red Mullet^c and the Lobster^d are attendant upon him. A marvel is this, a marvel unspeakable, when alien desires and strange loves distress wild beasts. For it is not alone for one another that God has given them the compelling ordinance of mutual love, nor only so far that their race should wax with everlasting life. That is, indeed, a marvel, that the brute tribes should be constrained by the bonds of desire and should know the passions of their own kind and, albeit without understanding should feel mutual desire for one another, even as for men thought and intelligence opens the eye and admits love to the heart ; but the wild races are also highly stirred by the frenzy of alien desires. How again does the Bustard^a of the shaggy ear^b rejoice in the swift Horse ! The Parrot^c again and the Wolf herd together ; for Wolves have ever a passion for the grass-hued^d bird. Mighty Love, how great art thou ! how infinite thy might ! how many things dost thou devise and ordain, how many, mighty spirit, are thy sports ! The earth is steadfast : yet is it shaken by thy shafts. Unstable is the sea : yet thou dost make it fast. Thou comest unto the upper air and high Olympus is afraid before thee. All things fear thee, the wide heaven above and all that is beneath the earth and the lamentable tribes of the dead, who, though they have drained with their lips the oblivious water of Lethe, still tremble before thee. By thy might thou dost pass afar, beyond what the shining sun doth ever behold : to thy fire even the light yields place for fear and the thunderbolts of Zeus likewise give place. Such fiery arrows, fierce spirit, hast thou—sharp, consuming, mind-destroying, maddening, whose melting breath knows no healing—wherewith thou dost stir even the very wild beasts to unmeet desires. A marvel it is when the winged Francolins leap on the spotted back of the horned Brocket^a or Partridges wheel swiftly about the Gazelle and cool their sweat and comfort their hearts in the sweltering heat with the flapping of their wings ; or when before a Horse of clattering hoof the Bustard goes, gliding delightful through the air ; or when the Sargues^b approach the herds of Goats. About the Subus, indeed, the whole wandering tribe of fishes is fluttered and all follow with him when he ploughs the wild waves and throng on either side for joy and the sea foams round about, lashed by their white fins. But he, recking not of their strange friendship, all lawlessly devours his companions of the sea and banquets on them with bloody jaws. And they, though seeing doom before their eyes, hate him not even so nor desert their slayer. Wretched Subus, worker of evil, for thine own self hereafter shall the hunters devise death by sea, crafty though thou art and slayer of fishes !

to wild beasts. His colour is even as that of milk in spring, only the cheeks about his face being black. He has a double back, rich in fat. Sharp rise aloft the piercing points of his horns, black of hue, which are mightier than whetted bronze or chilly iron or jagged rock, and men say that those horns have a venomous nature. The spirit of the Oryx is overweening and stern. For they tremble neither at the yelping of the keen-scented Hound nor at the snorting of the wild Boar among the rocks, neither do they fear the mighty bellowing of the Bull nor shudder at the mirthless cry of the Leopard nor the mighty roar of the Lion himself, nor in the dauntlessness of their heart do they care aught for men: many a time a mighty hunter has perished^a on the hills when he has encountered the deadly Oryxes. When the Oryx descires a valiant wild beast, a tusked Boar or a saw-toothed^b Lion or chilly Bear of deadly courage, straightway he bows to earth and holds steadfast his outstretched head and brows, and fixing close to the ground his sharp weapons, awaits the onset of the foe and strikes him first and slays. For bending a little aside his horned brows he watches and springs with his sharper weapons on the beast; which, heeding not, rushes incontinently straight on and horribly clashes with the sharp palisade of his horns. As when in the thickets, as a Lion charges, a valiant man, who is skilled in the gifts of Artemis, holding in his hands his flashing spear, with feet set well apart, awaits him, and, as he rages so recurved are a formidable weapon of offence, and when wounded and brought to bay, it will frequently pierce the hunter by a sudden and well-directed blow" (Tristr. p. 58). wildly, receives him with his two-edged brazen spear advanced : even so the Oryxes in that hour await the charge of the wild beasts, who are self-slain by their own folly. For the points of the horns glide easily into their breasts, and much dark blood, pouring on either side from their wounds—their own blood—they speedily lick with their tongues ; nor can they escape if they would, but they slay one another with mutual slaughter. And some countryman, a herdsman or a ploughman, chancing on the two corpses at his feet, with marvelling heart wins a welcome prey.

Next in order among horned wild beasts it is meet to sing the tribes of the Elephant infinite in size. Those two mighty weapons in their jaws, which rise like tusks towards the heavens, others of the vulgar herd call deadly teeth ; wherein they err : we are pleased to name them horns^a ; for so the nature of horns declares to us. Not obscure are the signs whereby they may be distinguished. For such growths from the upper jaws of wild beasts as are horny, spring upward : if they incline downward, they are certainly teeth.^b Of those two horns of the Elephant the roots first of all spring from the head, mighty as the head is mighty, even as the roots of the oak ; then below, concealed by skin where they meet the temples, they project into the jaw ; and when left bare by the jaws they give to the vulgar the false impression of teeth.^a Moreover, there is another clear sign for men. All teeth of wild beasts are unbending and do not yield to art but remain intractable, and if a worker in horn wishes by his skill to make them broad, they flatly refuse, and if they are forced, the stubborn teeth break stemwise. From horns on the other hand are fashioned bent bows and countless other works of art. In like manner those elephant horns which men call teeth, yield to the ivory-cutter to bend them or to broaden.^b

These beasts have a bulk such as on the earth no other wild beast yet hath worn. Seeing an Elephant thou wouldest say that a huge mountain-peak or a dread cloud, fraught with storm for hapless mortals, was travelling on the land. The head is strong with ears small, hollow, and polished. The eyes, though large, are small for that size of beast. Between them projects a great nose, thin and crooked, which men call the proboscis. That is the hand^c of the beast ; with it they easily do whatsoever they will. The legs are not equal^d in size ; for the fore-legs rise to a far greater height. The hide that covers the body is rugged, impenetrable and strong, which not even a whetted blade of mighty all-subduing iron would easily cleave. Wild without limit is the temper of the Elephant in the shady wood but among men he is tame and gentle to human kind. In the green glens of many cliffs he stretches root and branch upon the ground, oaks and wild olives and the high-crowned race of palms, assailing them with his sharp tremendous tusks ; but when he is in the strong hands of men, he forgets his temper and his fierce spirit leaves him : he endures even the yoke and receives the bit in his mouth and carries upon his back^a the boys who order his work.

It is said that Elephants talk to one another, mumbling with their mouths the speech of men. But not to all is the speech of the beasts audible, but only the men who tame them hear it. This marvel also have I heard, that the mighty Elephants have a prophetic soul within their breasts and know in their hearts when their inevitable doom is at hand. Not then among birds only are there prophets, even the Swans^b who sing their last lament, but among wild beasts also this tribe divine the end of death and perform their own dirge.

The Rhinoceros^c is not much larger than the bounding Oryx. A little above the tip of the nose rises a horn dread and sharp, a cruel sword. Charging therewith he could pierce through bronze and with its stroke could cleave a mighty cliff. He attacks the Elephant^a strong though it be and many a time lays so mighty a beast dead in the dust. On his yellowish,^b hairy brows and on his back dense spots show darkly. All the breed are males and a female is never seen. Whence they come I know not, but I speak as I have learnt, whether this deadly race springs from the rock or whether they are children of the soil and spring from the ground, or whether the wild monsters are begotten of one another, without desire and without mating and without birth. Even in the wet depths of the sea with its watery ways there are tribes which come into being self-made and motherless^c—Oysters and feeble Fry and the races of Sea-snails and Testacea and Spiral-shells and all that grow in the sands.

Dear Muse, it is not meet for me to sing of small creatures. Leave thou the feeble beasts which have no strength in them—the grey-eyed Panthers^d and list is unintelligible. If δστρακα=δστρακόδερμα, then the term is either equivalent to or includes δστρεα (according as that word is used in a wider or narrower sense), as it also includes κόχλοι (A. 527 b 35 τὰ δστρακόδερμα τῶν ζφων, ολον . . . οι κόχλοι και πάντα τὰ καλούμενα δστρεα) and στρόμβοι, whether that term be specific or generic (i.e.=τὰ στρομβώδη)—in which case it includes κόχλοι (A. 528 a 10 ο κόχλος και τάλλα τὰ στρομβώδη; cf. P.A. 679 b 14). If we ventured to substitute, for δστρεα, κεστρέων or κέστρεα (for the spontaneous generation of which cf. A. 543 b 17, 569 a 17 etc.; Athen. 306 F) and, for δστρακα, δστρεα, we should get a more intelligible text.

^a See C. iii. 63 n. Clearly to Oppian πάνθηρ denotes a smaller animal than πόρδαλις. According to Wiegmann (in Oken's Isis (1831), pp. 282 ff.) πάνθηρ=Felis uncia, the Ounce or Snow Leopard. It is confined to the highlands of Central Asia; cf. Plin. viii. 63 Nunc varias et pardos, qua mares sunt, appellant in eo omni genere creberrimo in Africa Syriaque. ^a In Oppian, as in A. 540 a 10 ; 580 a 23 ; 612 b 15, αἴλουρος seems to be a general name for the Cat, whether F. catus, the Wild Cat, M.G. ἀγριόγατος, or the Domestic Cat, F. domestica, M.G. γάτα; cf. Callim. H. vi. 110; Ael. iv. 44, v. 7, v. 30, v. 50. vi. 27; Plin. x. 174; Plut. Mor. 959 F γαλᾶτ καὶ αἴλουροι.

In A. 600 b 13 φωλεῖ δὲ καὶ ὁ ἐλειὸς ἐν αὐτοῖς τοῖς δένδρεσι καὶ γίνεται τότε παχύτατος the ref. seems to be to M. glis, or possibly M. nitela, though the Squirrel has been suggested, Bik. p. 12. Tristram found in Palestine "three species of dormouse, the largest of which (M. glis) is six inches long without the tail, which is five inches more. The the villain Cats^a which attack the nests of domestic fowls ; and leave thou the tiny, tender, weakling Dormice.^b These indeed remain with eyes closed all the winter season, drunk with sleep. Hapless creatures ! to take no food ! not to behold the light ! In their lairs, so deep asleep are they, they lie as dead and a wintry lot is theirs. But when the eyes of spring first smile and the flowers in the meadows newly bloom, they stir their sluggish bodies from their secret lair and open their eyes and behold the light of the sun, and with new delight bethink them of sweet food, and once more become alive and Dormice once again.

I leave too the shaggy race of the feeble Squirrel,^c who in the fiery season of midsummer erects his tail to shelter his self-roofed dwelling^d ; even as the Peacocks^e shelter their own beautiful form, their splendid form with many-pictured back : than whom the wisdom of Zeus hath devised for men naught

^a The Common Hedgehog, Erinaceus europaeus, M.G. ἀκανθόχοιρος, is common in Greece (Erh. p. 12, Bik. p. 8), as it is in Palestine (Trist. p. 101). Oppian's lesser Hedgehog is almost certainly the Spiny Mouse, M. acomys, of Syria and Africa, of which at least three species occur in Palestine. "They are most beautiful little creatures of a light sandy colour above and white beneath, and covered all over the back with bristles like a hedgehog" (Tristr. p. 123), from which, when the spines are erected, they are, except for their size, almost indistinguishable. more pleasant to behold with glad eyes, neither amid all that walk mother earth, giver of all gifts, nor amid all that travel on wings the spacious air, nor amid those that in the deep cleave the wild waves : in such wise on the splendid birds twinkles blazing fire mingled with the sheen of gold.

I will not tell of the chilly race of the prickly Hedgehog ^a—the lesser ; for two dread forms there are of the sharp-spined Hedgehogs with chilly fence encircling them. The one kind are small and feeble and bristle with small jutting spines ; the other sort are far larger in size and have stronger prickles bristling sharp on either side.

I leave the triple breeds of Apes,^b those villainous mimics.^c For who would not abhor such a race, ugly to look on, weak, loathsome, evil of aspect, crafty of counsel ? These, though they bring forth twin children of evil mien, divide not their love equally between both, but they love the one and hate and are angered at the other ; and he perishes in the very arms of his parents.

^b The triple breeds are doubtless those of A. 502 a 16 Ἐνιαδὲ τῶν ζώων ἐπαμφοτερίζει τὴν φύσιν τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ καὶ τοῖς τετράποσιν, οἷον πίθηκοι καὶ κῆροι καὶ κυνοκέφαλοι. Ἐστι δὲ ὁ μὲν κῆρος πίθηκος ἔχων οὐράν, καὶ οἱ κυνοκέφαλοι δὲ τὴν αὐτὴν ἔχουσι μορφὴν τοῖς πίθήκοις, πλὴν μείζονές τ' εἰσι καὶ ισχυρότεροι καὶ τὰ πρόσωπα ἔχοντες κυνοειδέστερα, ἔτι δὲ ἀγριώτερά τε τὰ ήθη καὶ τοὺς ὄδόντας ἔχουσι κυνοειδεστέρους καὶ ισχυροτέρους. They thus correspond to our Ape, Monkey, Baboon, and πίθηκος is prob. the Barbary Ape (Strab. 827), Macacus Inuis ; the κῆρος a Cercopithecus ; the κυνοκέφαλος the Cynocephalus humadryas or Arabian Baboon ; cf. * ἀσπάλαξ both in Opp. and in A. 488 a 21, 491 b 28, 533 a 3, 605 b 31, etc., is prob. Spalax typhlus, a rodent "with much of the external appearance of our mole but considerably larger, . . . of a silvery grey colour, without any external eyes or tail" (Tristr. p. 121). It is found in the Cyclades, where it is called τυφλοποντικός (i.e. blind-rat), Erh. p. 21. Neither our Common Mole, Talpa europaea, nor T. caeca has been found in the Cyclades (Erh. l.c.) or in Palestine (Tristr. p. 100); in continental Greece T. europaea is not found and the occurrence of T. caeca seems to be doubtful.

Neither of a truth will minstrels sing the earth-born tribes of the Moles,^a eaters of grass^b and blind,^c albeit a rumour not to be believed has spread among men that the Moles boast themselves sprung from the blood of a king, even of Phineus,^d whom a famous Thracian hill nurtured. Against Phineus once on a time was the Titan Phaethon angered, wroth for the victory of prophet Phoebus, and robbed him of his sight and sent the shameless tribes of the Harpies, a winged race to dwell with him to his sorrow. But when the two glorious sons of Boreas, even Zetes and Calais, voyaged on the ship Argo in quest of the golden prize, assisting Jason, then did they take compassion on the old man and slew that tribe and gave his poor lips sweet food. But not even so did Phaethon lull his wrath to rest, but speedily turned him into the race of Moles which were before not ; wherefore even now the race remains blind and gluttonous of food.

^c The eyes of T. europaea, though rudimentary, are visible externally ; those of T. caeca and S. typhlus are not. A. 491 b 29 δλως μὲν γὰρ οὐθ' ὄρα (ό ασπάλαξ) οὐτ' ἔχει εἰς τὸ φανερὸν δήλους ὄφθαλμούς. Cf. 533 a 3 ; De an. 425 a 10 ; Plin. xi. 139 quadrupedum talpis visus non est : oculorum effigies inest, si quis praetentam detrahat membranam.

^d Phineus of Salmydessus in Thrace was blinded of both eyes and afflicted by the Harpies until these were destroyed by Zebes and Calais (Pind. P. iv. 182), the sons of Boreas ; Apollod. i. 9. 21 ; Ap. Rh. ii. 176 ff. ; Verg. A. iii. 225 ff. The connexion of Phineus with the mole seems to be peculiar to Oppian.

BUT now that we have sung the tribes of horned wild beasts, Bulls and Stags and splendid Broad-horns and Gazelles, of the Oryx and beautiful Iorcus and others whose heads are armed above, come now, O goddess, let us tell of the saw-toothed ^a company of flesh-eating ^b beasts and the tusked races.

First of all to the Lion let us dedicate the glorious lay. The Curetes were the nurses of the infant Zeus, the mighty son of Cronus, what time Rhea concealed his birth and carried away the newly-born child from Cronus, his sire implacable, and placed him in the vales of Crete. And when the son^c of Uranus beheld the lusty young child he transformed the first glorious guardians of Zeus and in vengeance made the Curetes wild beasts. And since by the natim coeuntes, ne contrario occursu atterantur (A. P.A. 661 b 21), ut serpentibus, piscibus, canibus; continui, ut homini, equo; exserti, ut apro, hippopotamo, elephanto. . . . Nulli exserti quibus serrati. The carcharodonts are carnivorous and have sharp, saw-like, cutting cheek teeth; the chauliodonts have flat-crowned cheek teeth, adapted for crushing or grinding.

devising of the god Cronus they exchanged their human shape and put upon them the form ^a of Lions, thenceforth by the boon of Zeus they greatly lord it over the wild beasts which dwell upon the hills, and under the yoke they draw the terrible swift car of Rhea who lightens the pangs of birth.

Various are the tribes of them and each species has its own form. Those which by the waters of a noisy river, even beside the broad stream of the Tigris, are bred by Armenia, mother of archers, and by the land of the Parthians, rich in tilth and pasture, are yellow-haired and not so valiant. They have a stouter neck and a large head, bright eyes and high and bushy brows, ample and lowering over the nose. From neck and jaws springs on either side luxuriant hair.

Those again which the bountiful land of the Erembi ^b rears—the land which the tribes of mortal men call Fortunate ^c—these also have shaggy neck and breast, and flashes of fire lighten from their eyes, and they are handsome above all; but of these the infinite earth hath but a scanty breed.

But a great throng of mighty Lions roar in the goodly land of thirsty Libya—no longer shaggy these but a thin sheen runs over them. Terrible are they of face and neck, and on all their limbs they bear a blackish hue stained with dark blue. The strength in their limbs is limitless, and the Libyan Lions greatly lord it over the lordly Lions.

^b O.T. Num. xxiv. 9 He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up?

From the Ethiopians once on a time there came to the land of Libya, a great marvel to behold, a well-manned Lion, black of hue, broad of head above, hairy of foot, bright of eye, reddening only on the yellow mouth. I have seen, not merely heard of, that terrible beast, when it was transported to be a spectacle for royal eyes.

The tribes of Lions do not need food ^a every day but one day they devote to feeding, the next in turn to labour. Neither doth the Lion take his sleep by the inmost bounds of a rock, but he sleeps ^b in the open, revolving a courageous soul, and wheresoever sovran night overtakes him at evening, there he sleeps.

This also have I heard from the keepers of Lions, to wit that under his right paw the tawny Lion has a power of swift benumbing,^c wherewith he utterly numbs the knees of wild beasts.

Five times^d doth the Lioness loose her zone in birth, and idle truly is the report that she bears but one. Five she bears the first time, but next she travails with four cubs; then next in order from her third labour spring three; from her fourth spring twin young; and last from her womb of noble progeny the mother brings forth the glorious Lion King.

^a Schol. B Hom. II. xx. 170 ἔχει (ό λέων) ὑπὸ τῇ οὐρᾷ κέντρον μέλαν, ὡς κεράτιον, δι' οὐ ἀντὸν μαστίζει. ὑφ' οὐ γυπτόμενος πλέον ἀγνοοῦται. A. 630 a 5 mentions the suppuration of wounds inflicted by lions' teeth and claws, but says nothing of numbing.

^a πάρδαλις (πόρδαλις), the commoner and older word (Hom. Il. xiii. 103, xxi. 573; Od. iv. 457), and πάνθηρ (first in Herod. iv. 192) are translated alike by panthera in Latin writers,

Next the deadly Leopards ^a are a double race. The one sort are larger to look on and stouter as to their broad backs, while the other sort are smaller but no whit inferior in valiance. The daedal forms of both are alike, apart only from the tail, where a perversity is seen : the lesser Leopards have the larger, the large the lesser tail. The thighs are well knit, the body is long, the eye bright : the shining pupils show grey-green beneath their brows, grey-green at once and red within, flaming as if on fire ; but in the mouth beneath the teeth are pale and venomous. The hide is variegated and on a bright ground is dark with close-set black spots. Very swift it is in running and valiant in a straight charge. Seeing it thou wouldest say that it sped through the air. Notwithstanding minstrels celebrate this race of beasts as having been aforetime the nurses of Bacchus, giver of the grape ; wherefore even now they greatly exult in wine and receive in their mouths the great gift of Dionysus. What matter it was that changed glorious women from the race of mortals into this wild race of Leopards I shall hereafter sing.

Another swift race, moreover, of twofold nature as conversely the later Greek writers render the Latin panthera by πάρδαλις (Plut. Cic. xxxvi. coll. Cic. Ad fam. ii. 11). When πάρδαλις and πάνθηρ are distinguished (Xen. C. 2. 1; Athen. 201 c; Ael. vii. 47; Poll. v. 88), then, according to Wiegmann, πάρδαλις = Felis pardus L. and Cuv. (F. leopardus Temminck), while πάνθηρ = F. uncia. Of the two Panthers or Leopards in our present passage the larger, according to Wiegmann, is F. pardus L. and Cuv. (F. leopardus Temm.), the varia (Plin. viii. 63) and pardus of the Romans, while the smaller is F. pardus Temm., cf. A. and W. ii. p. 294. See C. ii. 572 n.

Both are clothed in altogether similar form. Alike are the delightful flashes that lighten from their eyes beneath their brows ; both have bright face, small head, and curving ear ; only their colour is dissimilar to look on. The smaller Lynxes are covered with a ruddy hide, while the colour of the larger is saffron and like sulphur. Beyond others these tribes love their dear offspring, the keen-eyed Lynxes and the fiery-eyed Lions and the deadly Leopards and the windswift Tigers. When in the thickets fearless hunters secretly steal away their suckling cubs, and they returning afterward behold their empty house and home made desolate, they shrilly wail their loud lament and far they send abroad their doleful dirge ; even as, when their fatherland is sacked with the spear and burnt with raging fire, women fall upon their children's necks and loudly weep. heart : not alone in men who devise all things by their wits but even in creeping things and fish and the ravenous wild beasts themselves and the high-ranging flocks of birds : so much is nature mightier than all beside. What care doth the Dolphin^a amid the waves take evermore of its children, and the bright-eyed Glaucus^b and the Seal^c of evil smell ! And how among the fowls of air do they cherish unfailing love for their own children—the Giers^d and the deep-noted Doves and the tribes of the Eagle and the long-lived Crow ! And the domestic mother Hen, companion of the homes of men, fluttering about her new-hatched chicks, how, when she sees a Hawk swooping down over the roof, doth she straightway utter a piercing scream and spring up with shrill cry and lift her arching neck high into the air and speedily ruffle all her plumage and droop her wings to the ground, while the poor chickens cheeping cower together beneath the bulwark of her wings ; and speedily she routs and drives away the shameless bird, defending her dear children, still infants whom she feeds, unfledged and newly delivered from the bondage of the chambers of birth.^e So also among wild beasts roaring Lionesses and swift Leopards and Tigers of striped back stand forward to defend their children and fight with hunters and for their young ones are prepared to die, joining issue with the spearmen face to face ;

Wild Bears,^a a deadly race of crafty wits, are clothed in a close and rugged coat of hair ^b and a form unkindly with unsmiling eyes. For evermore by day and night the females lust for mating and themselves pursue the males, seldom intermitting the pleasures of union and conceiving young when already pregnant. For it is not the custom for wild beasts when they are with young to mate and fulfil the work of desire, apart only from the Lynxes and the weakling Hares.^d But the she Bear in her desire for mating, and abhorring to have her bed widowed, endures to devise for her children thus : ere the season of birth, ere the appointed day arrives, she puts pressure on her womb and does violence to the goddesses of birth : so great her lechery, so great her haste for love. rocks and devour their own tentacles ; but when spring blooms, moist and fertile, new arms speedily grow for them again and once again with fair array of suckers they sail the long path of the sea.

Next in order let us tell of the Wild Ass,^a well-ankled, swift as air, fleet-footed^b like the wind, strong-hoofed, and tall. Bright is he of eye, strong of body, broad to behold, silvery of colour, long-eared, most swift to run. About the middle of his back is set a black stripe, surrounded on either side by snowy bands. He eats hay^c and the grass-growing earth feeds him abundantly ; but he himself is good food for mighty wild beasts. The tribes of the wind-footed Wild Asses are altogether prone to jealousy and they glory in many wives and plume themselves thereon. The females follow wheresoever the husband leads : they haste to the pasture when he wills to bid them, and, when he bids, to the river springs, the wild beasts' wine, and anon to their bosky homes when evening brings sleep. A fierce and shameless frenzy stirs jealousy^d in all the males against their own young sons. For when the female is in the travail of Eileithyia, the male sits hard by and watches for his own offspring. And when the infant foal falls at the feet of his mother, if it is a female, the father is fond of his child and licks it on either side with his tongue and caresses his dear offspring ; but if he sees that it is a male, then, then the frenzied beast stirs his heart with deadly jealousy about the mother and he leaps forth, eager to rend^a with his jaws the privy parts of his child, lest afterward a new brood should grow up ; while the mother, though but newly delivered and weak from the travail of birth, succours her poor child in the quarrel. As when in grievous war cruel warriors slay a child before the eyes of his mother and hale herself while she clings to her son yet writhing in his blood and wails with loud and lamentable cry and tears her tender cheek and is drenched below with the hot blood and warm milk of her breasts ; even so the she Wild Ass is just as if she were piteously lamenting and sorrowfully wailing over her son. Thou wouldest say that all unhappy, bestriding her child, she was speaking honeyed words and uttering this prayer. " O husband, husband, wherefore is thy face hardened and thine eyes red that before were bright ? It is not Medusa's^b brow who turned men to stone that thou beholdest near ; not the venomous offspring of Dragoness implacable ; not the lawless whelp of mountain-roaming Lioness. The child whom I, unhappy mother, bare, the child for whom we prayed to the gods, even thine own child, wilt thou with thine own jaws mutilate ? Stay, dear, mar him not ! ^c Philomela and Procne were daughters of Pandion, king of Athens. Procne married Tereus, king of Thrace. Tereus insulted Philomela and, lest she should reveal his guilt, cut out her tongue. But Philomela depicted her misfortune on a tapestry which she sent to Procne. Procne killed her son Itylus and served him up as food to his father Tereus. Tereus was turned into a Hoopoe, Procne into a Nightingale, Philomela into a Swallow. Apollod. iii. 14; Ov. M. vi. 426 ff.

hast turned the child to nothingness and hast made all his body blind. Wretched and unhappy I in my untimely motherhood, and altogether wretched thou, my child, in thy most sinful father. Wretched I, thrice miserable, who have travailed in vain, and wretched thou, marred not by the claws of Lions, but by the cruel lion jaws of thy sire." Thus one would say the unhappy mother speaks over her infant son, while the unheeding father with bloody jaws makes mirthless banquet of his child. O father Zeus, how fierce a heart hath Jealousy ! Him hast thou made, O lord, mightier than nature to behold and hast given him the bitter force of fire, and in his right hand hast vouchsafed to him to wear a sword of adamant. He preserves not, when he comes, dear children to their loving parents, he knows nor comrade nor kin nor cousin, when he intervenes grievous and unspeakable. He also in former times arrayed against their own children heroes themselves and noble heroines—Theseus,^a son of Aegeus, and Athamas,^b son of Aeolus, and Attic Proene^c and Thracian^d Philomela and Colchian Medea^e and The Roman writers usually invert the story, making Proene the Swallow (e.g. Ov. F. ii. 855), Philomela the Nightingale (e.g. Verg. G. iv. 511, but the Greek version E. vi. 79), and this has become traditional in English poetry.

In the precipitous bounds of the Ethiopians there is a great tribe of Wild Horses,^c armed with two venomous tusks. Their feet, however, have not a single hoof, but double like that of Deer. The mane of the neck covers the middle of the back even to the end of the tail. Never does that dread overweening tribe endure the servitude of man, but even if the dark-skinned Indians by crafty ambush take the Wild Horse in their well-twisted toils, he will not readily taste food with his lips nor drink, but badly bears the yoke of slavery.

^c Of the possible senses of δυσδερκής, δυσδέρκετος, (1) seeing with difficulty, (2) seen with difficulty, (3) ill to see, i.e. hideous or terrible, δυσδέρκετος in C. ii. 607 of the Ape seems to have sense (3); δυσδερκής has sense (2) in C. i. 102 ίχνη δυσδερκέα and 451 στιβίης δυσδερκέος. In II. i. 47 where the κύτεα are called δυσδερκέα δείματα λίμνης (Schol. δυσθέατα, δυσθεώρητα) the sense may be (3) or (1); II. v. 64 οὔτε γάρ εἰσορόωσιν ἀπόπτροθεν is in favour of the latter. Hyena^a; the first a destroyer of flocks of Sheep and herds of Goats, the other the foe of Dogs and mighty Hounds; the one, through the unescapable impulse of hunger, the crafty^b harrier by night of Lamb and Kid, the other a night-farer and night-wanderer, since for it there is light by night but darkness by day. The forms of these two bloody beasts are unlike. The Wolf thou wouldest behold like to the larger shepherd Dogs, with bushy tail behind. The Hyena has the midst of the back arched and it is shaggy^c all about and the dread body is marked on either side with close-set dark stripes. It is narrow and long of back and tail. The hide of both beasts the minstrels celebrate as terrible. If thou wert to cut off a piece of hide of the Hyena and wear it on thy feet, thou wouldest wear a great terror to mighty Dogs, and Dogs bark not at thee wearing those shoes, even if they barked before. And if thou shouldst flay a Wolf and from his hide make a sounding tabor, like the tabor of Dindymus^d which destroys increase,^e it alone of all sounds its deep note and it alone makes a din, while all the tabors that had a goodly sound before are silent and hush all their noise. Sheep even when dead shudder at a dead Wolf. This marvel^a also I have heard about the spotted Hyenas, to wit that the male and female change year by year, and one is now a weak-eyed bridegroom all eager to mate and anon appears as a lady bride, a bearer of children, and a goodly mother.

But five in number are the grey-haired breeds of Wolves, and herdsmen, whose bitter foes the wolf-tribes are, have remarked their different forms. First there is that which they call the bold Archer. Tawny is all his body, and his rounded limbs and head and swift limbs are larger far. The belly is light-coloured with grey spots. Terribly he howls and very high he leaps, ever shaking his head and glaring with fiery eyes.

Another again is superior in size and long of limb, swiftest in speed^b among all Wolves that are ; him men name the Hawk and the Harrier. With much din he fares forth in the early morning to seek his prey at the first glimmering of dawn ; for he easily becomes anhungered. Silvery gleams his colour on ribs and tail. He dwells on the high^c hills ; but when in the winter season the chilly snow pours from the clouds and covers the hills, then doth the deadly beast draw nigh even to the city, having clothed himself with utter shamelessness for the sake of food ; and stealthily he approaches and very quietly till he comes upon his prey, which speedily he seizes in his sharp claws.

^a ὡκα may be merely = δχα (Hom.).

^b μακρά = high ; cf. οὐρεα μακρά (Hom. Il. xiii. 18, etc.), δένδρεα μακρά (Hom. Il. ix. 541, etc.), μακρὸς Ὄλυμπος (Hom. Il. xv. 193). So βραχύς = short of stature, Pind. I. vi. 44.

^a M. between Cilicia and Syria: Strab. 749, etc.

^b It seems impossible to determine whether ἄκμονες here is merely an epithet (=ἄκμῆτες, ἄκαματοι), or a metaphorical use of ἄκμων=anvil, or a specific name (cf. Hesych. s.v.

And there is one which beyond the snow-clad heights of Taurus inhabits the Cilician hills and cliffs of Amanus,^a beautiful of aspect, most excellent among beasts, which they call the Golden Wolf, brilliant with abundant hair : no Wolf but a tall beast more excellent than a Wolf, armed with mouth of bronze, infinite in might. Many a time he pierces amain the enduring bronze, many a time he pierces stone or the iron spear. He knows the Dog-star Sirius and dreads his rising ; straightway he creeps into some cleft of the wide earth or into a lightless cave, until the sun and the baleful Dog-star abate their heat.

Again there are two redoubtable^b Wolves, a deadly race, small of neck, very broad of back, but less of size in shaggy thighs and feet and face and small of eye. Of these one is brilliant with silvery back and white belly, and is dark only on the extremities of his feet. This grey-haired Wolf some men have named the Kite. But the other is dark of hue, smaller than the former yet not wanting in strength. He is a great hunter and makes Hares his prey, leaping upon them while all the hair upon his limbs bristles erect.

Often^c Wolves mate with the fierce Leopards, and from the union springs the mighty tribe of Jackals.^d They wear two colours mingled together, the mother's colour on the hide, the father's on the face.

Next let us sing the Tiger^a of glorious form, than which cunning nature has vouchsafed naught more pleasant for the eyes to behold amid the great company of wild beasts. As much doth the Tiger excel among wild beasts as the Peacock doth for beauty among the fowls of air. Every way like a lioness of the hills wouldest thou behold it, apart only from the hide, which is variegated, with darkling stripes and brilliant sheen. Like are the eyes that lighten with fiery flash beneath the brows ; like the body, strong and fleshy ; like the long and bushy tail ; like the face about the mouth ; like the frowning brows above ; like the gleaming teeth. Swifter^b is it than all wild beasts that are ; for it runs with speed like its sire, the West Wind^c himself. Yet the West Wind is not its sire ; who would believe that wild beasts mated with an airy bridegroom ? For that also is an empty tale, that all this tribe is female and mates not with a male ; for often mightst thou see its handsome spouse of many colours, but not easily couldst thou capture him ; for he leaves his young^d and flees amain when he descries the hunters ; but the female follows her cubs and in the anguish of her heart--to the great joy of the hunters --comes straight to the nets.

Eminent among warlike wild beasts is the Boar.^e

He loves a lair in the farthest depths of the crags and greatly he loathes the noisy din of wild beasts. Unceasingly he roams in pursuit of the female and is greatly excited by the frenzy of desire. On his neck the hair bristles erect, like the crest of a great-plumed helmet. He drops foam upon the ground and gnashes the white hedge of his teeth, panting hotly ; and there is much more rage about his mating than modesty.^a If the female abide his advances, she quenches all his rage and lulls to rest his passion. But if she refuses intercourse and flee, straightway stirred by the hot and fiery goad of desire he either overcomes her and mates with her by force or he attacks her with his jaws and lays her dead in the dust. There is a tale touching the Wild Boar that his white tusk ^b has within it a secret devouring fiery force. A manifest proof of this for men is well founded. For when a great thronging crowd of hunters with their Dogs lay the beast low upon the ground, overcoming him with long spear on spear, then if one take a thin hair from the neck and approach it to the tusk of the still gasping beast, straightway the hair takes fire and curls up. And on either side of the Dogs themselves, where the fierce tusks of the Swine's jaws have touched them, marks of burning are traced upon the hide.

Ora urgumentum figit canum et paulo longius iaculatur. The legend, which arose doubtless from "the rattling of the spines and the occasional falling out of loose ones" (Camb. N.H. x. p. 501), is elaborated by Claud. De hystr. with the inevitable comparison to the shafts of the flying Parthian

Their size is like that of the bloody Wolves ; short, small, and strong is their body, but their hide bristles all about with rough and shaggy quills, such as those with which the cunning tribes of Hedgehogs^a are armed. But when far mightier beasts pursue him, then he uses this device. He erects his sharp quills and backward hurls^b straight the dire shaft that bristles on his flying back, and both flees amain and fights as he seeks to escape. Many^c a time he slays a saw-toothed Dog ; even so, one would say, shoots a man well skilled in archery. Therefore when the hunters espy him, they do not slip the Dogs but devise a trick, which I shall tell^d when I sing of the slaying of wild beasts.

The Ichneumon^e is small, but as well worthy to be sung as large beasts by reason of the cunning and great valiance which it hides in a feeble body. For indeed by its craft it slays two tribes—the reptile Serpents and the terrible Crocodiles,^f those creatures of the Nile, a deadly race. When one of the dread beasts sleeps, opening his lips with triple row and his wide gape and his fence unspeakable of flashing teeth, then the Ichneumon weaves a subtle device.^a With eyes askance he watches the huge beast until he is confident in his heart that it is deep asleep. Then, having rolled himself in sand and mud he swiftly springs and flies with daring heart through the gate of death and passes through the wide throat. Then the wretched Crocodile wakes from his heavy sleep and carrying in his belly such an evil unlooked for, everywhere he roams in helpless rage, now going to the farthest reaches of the river, now rolling shoreward in the sand, gasping wildly and tossing in his agony. But the Ichneumon heeds not but enjoys his sweet repast ; and mostly by the liver he sits to banquet ; then late and last he leaps forth and leaves the empty body of the beast. O Ichneumon, marvellous and mighty, cunning in counsel, how great daring thy heart holds ! What a task thou dost undertake, advancing thy body to the very jaws of death.

The venomous Asp^b the Ichneumon overcomes by this device.^c He lies in wait for the beast, hiding all his body in the sands, save only the tail and the fiery eyes ; for the tail is long and snakelike with curling

^b The cunning of the Fox is of course proverbial: A. 488 b 20 τὰ μὲν πανούργα καὶ κακούργα οἷον ἀλώπηξ. Hence its name κερδώ (i.e. κερδαλεόφρων), a fem. Kosename or pet-name

headlike tufts, black to the view, like the scales of serpents. When he seeks the dusky puffing viper, he arches his tail in front of her and challenges the deadly beast. The Asp over against him lifts up her head hard by and expands her breast and bares her stubborn teeth and fights vainly with her deadly jaws. But then the warlike Ichneumon lingers not in the sands, but leaps and seizes her terrible throat and rends her with his jaws as she twists this way and that and straightway lays her dead—vainly spitting^a forth the bitter deadly venom of her passionate wrath.

Furthermore, most cunning^b among all the beasts of the field is the Fox.^c Warlike of heart and wise she dwells in remotest lair, with seven-gated openings to her house and tunnelled earths far from one another, lest hunters set an ambush about her doors and lead her captive with snares. Terrible is she to fight with her teeth against stronger wild beasts and hunting Dogs. And when chilly winter comes and she lacks food, and the vines show bare of grapes, then she weaves a deadly device for hunting, to capture by craft birds^d and the young of Hares.^e

^b The Camelopard or Giraffe, Giraffe Camelopardalis, cf. Agatharch. ap. Phot. 455. 4 παρὰ τοῖς τρωγλοδύταις ἐστὶν ἡ λεγομένη παρ' Ἑλλησι καμηλοπάρδαλις, σύνθετον τρόπον τινὰ κατὰ τὴν κλῆσιν καὶ τὴν φύσιν λαχοῦσα. τὴν μὲν γὰρ ποικιλίαν (i.e. spotted hide) ἔχει παρδάλεως, τὸ μέγεθος δὲ καμήλου, τὸ πάχος δὲ ὑπερφύεσ, τὸν δὲ αὐχένα τοιοῦτον ὥστε ἀπ' ἄκρων ἀμέλγεσθαι τῶν δένδρων τὴν τροφήν; Strabo 827; Diod. ii. 51; Heliod. x. 27; Athen. 201 c; Solin. xxx. 19; Plin. viii. 69 Nabun Aethiopes vocant collo similem equo, pedibus et cruribus bovi, camelo capite, albis maculis rutilum colore dis-

Tell also, I pray thee, O clear-voiced Muse of diverse tones, of those tribes of wild beasts which are of hybrid ^a nature and mingled of two stocks, even the Pard of spotted back joined and united with the Camel.^b O Father Zeus, how many things hast thou devised, how many forms hast thou created for us, how many hast thou given to men, how many to the finny creatures of the sea ! Even as thou hast devised this very varied form of the Camel, clothing with the hide of the shameless Pard a race splendid and lovely and gentle to men. Long is its neck, its body spotted, the ears small, bare the head above, long the legs, the soles of the feet broad ; the limbs are unequal and the legs are not altogether alike, but the fore-legs are greater while the hind-legs are much smaller and look as if they were squatting on their haunches. From the middle of the head two horns rise straight up—not horny horns,^c but feeble projections on the head which alongside the ears rise up between the temples. The tender mouth is sufficiently large, like that of a Stag and within are set on either side thin milk-white teeth. A bright gleam lightens from the eyes. The tail, again, is short, like that of the swift Gazelles, with dark hair at the hinder end.

tinguentibus, unde appellata camelopardalis, dictatoris Caesaris circensibus ludis primum visa Romae. A. 498 b 32 τὸ θηρίον τὸ πάρδιον (v.l. ιππαρίδιον) ὄνυμαζόμενον, described as having a fine mane, horned and cloven-hooved, has been thought to refer to the Giraffe.

^a The so-called "horns" of the Giraffe, which are possessed both by male and female, though less developed in the latter, "differ from those of all other Ruminants ; they are small bony prominences of the frontal bones, which become fused with the Skull, and which are covered with unmodified skin. They are not shed" (Camb. N.H. x. p. 302).

Yea and another double breed have I beheld with mine eyes, a mighty marvel, Camel united with Sparrow^a; which, though it is numbered with the lightsome birds and is winged, notwithstanding my lays shall celebrate, since the varied range of our hunting admits it. For the lime that is the enemy of birds does not prevail over it, nor the reeds that tread an airy path, but Horses and swift Hounds and unseen snares. Its size is huge, so that it can carry on its broad back a young boy. The legs are long, like to those of the sluggish Camels, and are arrayed as it were with close-set hard scales up to the double thigh.^b Small is the head that it rears on high but long the hairy dusky neck. They have abundant feathers; yet they do not sail aloft on the high paths of air, but notwithstanding, as they run swiftly with their feet, they have a speed equal to the birds themselves. Nor do they mate like birds^c by mounting but, like the Bactrian tribe,^d rear to ^b Lepus timidus L. and allied species. M.G. λαγώς. Besides the normal Greek name λαγώς we find (1) the poetical term πτῶξ (cf. C. i. 165), first as an epithet, Hom. Il. xxii. 310 πτῶκα λαγών, "the cowering Hare," in allusion to its timidity (Poll. v. 72; Ael. vii. 19), but already in Hom. Il. xvii. 676 as a substantive; cf. Aesch. Ag. 137 (2) δασύπονος, the Furry-footed, frequent in Aristotle, used also by Plut. Mor. 971 a, etc.; Poll. v. 68, and, acc. to Athen. 399 e, f, by some of the Comic Poets; Plin. viii. 219 (quoted on l. 519), where he seems to distinguish lepus and dasyurus, is unintelligible. Similarly in the Anthol. x. 11 λασίον ποδὸς ἵχνια = tracks of the Hare.

The Hare is very common in the whole of Greece (Bik. p. 14)—though it would appear that at one time it was rare rear.^a It lays a huge egg, of size to hold so great a bird, armed about with stony shell.

Let us sing of Hares,^b rich harvest of the hunt. The body ^c is small and hairy, the ears are very long, small the head above, small the feet, the limbs unequal. The colour with which they are clothed varies ; some are dark and dusky, which inhabit the black-soiled tilth : others are reddish-yellow, which live in red-coloured plains. Brightly flash their goodly orbs, their eyes armed with sleeplessness ^d ; for never do they slumber and admit sleep upon their eyelids, being afraid of the violence of wild beasts and the nimble wit of men, but they are wakeful in the night and indulge their desire. Unceasingly in Attica, cf. Nausierates (Comic Poet) ap. Athen. l.c. ἐν τῷ γὰρ Ἀττικῷ τὸ εἰδὲ πώποτε | λέοντας η̄ τοιῶτον ἔτερον θηρίον ; | οὐ δασύτοδός εὑρεῖν ἐστιν οὐχὶ ῥάδιον. In many of the Cyclades the Hare is extremely common and differs in no essential point from the Common Hare of Europe (Erh. p. 22). On the other hand, in some of the Cyclades it is either not found at all or confined to a particular region, its place being taken by the Rabbit, L. cuniculus. The curious thing is that Hares and Rabbits in the Cyclades seem to be mutually exclusive. Thus only Hares are found in Ceos, Siphnos, Syros, Tenos, Naxos, Paros, Melos, and the North of Andros ; only Rabbits in Gyaros, Cythnos, Seriphos, Aspronisi, Myconos, Delos, Cimolos, Pholegandros, and the South of Andros. There is nothing in the geographical conditions to account for this phenomenon ; all the islands offer exactly similar facilities for life and nurture. Yet Syros has only Hares, while the little island of Aspronisi, six nautical miles S. of Syros, has only Rabbits. A curious parallel is offered by Syria, where the Hare is common, while "No Rabbit is found in Syria or in any of the adjoining countries" (Tristr. p. 99). Cf. Plin. viii. 226 f.

IV

So many are the species of wild beasts, so many in the shady wood their nuptial loves and companionships, their hates and deadly feuds, their couches in the wild. Now let us sing the great business of the toilsome hunters, both their valiant might and their prudent counsel, their cunning craft and their heart armed with manifold wiles ; for verily that heart wars against wild races to whom God hath given strength and goodly courage and wits not far inferior to the hunters themselves.

Many are the modes of glorious and profitable hunting : modes innumerable, suited to the various beasts and tribes and glens. Who with his single mind should comprehend them all and tell of them in order with euphonious song ? Who could behold them all ? Who could behold so much, being mortal ? Only the Gods easily see all things.^a But I shall tell what I have seen with my own eyes when following in the woods the chase, splendid of boons, and whatever cunning mysteries of all manner of delightful craft I have learned from them whose business it is ; fain as I am to sing of all these things to the son of Divine Severus. And do thou of thy grace, O lady goddess, queen of the chase, declare those things for quick royal ears, so that knowing before all the lore of thy works the king may slay wild beasts, blessed at once in hand and song.

Of wild beasts some are wise^a and cunning but small of body ; others again are valiant in might but weak in the counsel of their breasts ; others are both craven of heart and feeble of body, but swift of foot ; to others again God hath given all the gifts together —cunning counsel, valorous strength, and nimble knees. But they know each^b the splendid gifts of his own nature—where they are feeble and where they are deadly.^c Not with his horns is the Stag bold but with his horns the Bull ; not with his teeth is the Oryx strong, but with his teeth the Lion ; not in his feet doth the Rhinoceros trust, but feet are the armour of the Hare ; the deadly Leopard knows the baleful venom of his claws and the dread Ram the mighty strength of his stony forehead, and the wild Boar knows the exceeding might of his tusks.

Now whatever special arts and snares are used by deadly hunters amid the crags, the particular ways of hunting we shall tell for each sort of beast ; but those things which are common to all, are sung in one lay. Common is hunting with nets, common torpedines : multa etiam infectantes odoris intolerabili foeditate depellunt ; cf. Ov. Hal. 1 ff.

Cyr. i. 6. 28*). It corresponds to the Lat. pedica dentata (Gratt. 92 Quid si dentatas iligno robore clausit Venator pedicas?) and is said to have been invented by Aristaeus (Plut. Mor. 757 Π εὔχονται δ' Ἀρισταῖψ δολοῦντες ὁρύγμασι καὶ βρύχοις λύκους καὶ ἄρκτους, δι πρῶτος θήρεσσιν ἔπηξε ποδάγρας; cf. Nonn. v. 234). It is described Poll. l.c., Xen. C. 9. 11 ff. It consisted of a wooden hoop (στεφάνη) containing a framework (πλόκανον) in which were set nails of wood and iron alternately (Poll. seems to say that the nails were in the στεφάνη but Xen. describes them as ἐγκαταπεπλεγμένους ἐν τῷ πλόκανῳ and acc. to Poll. πλόκανον ἐν μέσῳ τῷ πλέγματι πέπλεκται). Inside the frame is set a noose (βρύχος) and attached to it by a rope (σειρής, ἄρπεδόνη) is a clog (ξύλον): trap, rope, and clog are all sunk in the ground and covered over. When the trap is sprung (ἀνεστραμμένη) by the beast treading on it, the noose entangles the foot or feet of the game while the clog hampers its movements and by its trail on the ground indicates the path of its flight.

are traps,^a and common is the chase of all the swift-footed tribes by men with horses and dogs, or sometimes without dogs pursuing the quarry with horses only : those horses which pasture in the land of the Moors, or Libyan horses, which are not constrained by might of hand with the curb of the compelling bridle but obey the riding-switch,^b wheresoever their rider directs their course. Wherefore the riders who are mounted on those horses leave their beloved dogs at home and ride forth trusting to their horses and the rays of the sun, without other helpers. Common, too, is hurling the javelin and shooting with the bow at the mightier wild beasts which fight amain with men.

With reference to the net one must steer the course of the hunt and avoid the breath of the breeze and watch the wind. And even as men who ride in seafaring ships sit in the stern with the tiller in their hands and scan the sky and obedient to the white South Wind^a spread the sails of their ships of canvas wings,^b so on the dry land I bid the hunter scan on either hand the winds that blow, that so they may set up their nets and drive the game ever against the wind ; since all wild beasts have keenest sense of smell, and if they perceive the scent either of the net-stakes or the spread net, they rush the other way and flee incontinently even in the very face of the men and make vain the labour of the hunt. Therefore I would have the slayers of wild beasts scan the rushing winds and face the course of the wind when they attend to their stakes and the setting of nets ; let them make back to the South when the clear North Wind rises ; to the North if the dewy South Wind rages ; when the East Wind gets up, let them run with the breezes of the West ; when the West Wind stirs, let them speedily make for the East.

But I would have thee first of all lay to heart the excellent lion-hunt and the valiant spirit of the hunters. First they go and mark a place where among the caves a roaring well-maned Lion dwells, a great terror to cattle and to the herdsmen themselves. Next they observe the great path with the worn tracks of the wild beast, whereby he often goes to the river to drink a sweet draught. There they dig a round pit,^a wide and large ; and in the midst of the trench they build a great pillar, sheer and high. From this they hang aloft a suckling lamb taken from its mother that hath newly yeaned. And outside the pit they wreath a wall around, built with close-set boulders, that the Lion may not see the crafty chasm when he draws near. And the high-hung suckling lamb bleats, and the sound strikes the Lion's hungry heart, and he rushes in search of the lamb, exulting in his heart, hastening in the track of the cry and scanning this side and that with fiery eyes. And anon he comes nigh the snare, and he wheels about and a great hunger urges him, and straightway obeying the impulse of hunger he leaps over the wall, and the wide round chasm receives him, and he comes unwittingly to the gulf of a pit unlooked for. Everywhere he circles about, rushing ever backwards and forwards, even as a swift race-horse round the turning-post, constrained by the hands of his charioteer and by the bridle. And from their far-seen place of outlook the hunters see him and rush up, and with well-cut straps they bind and let down a plaited well-compacted cage, in which also they put a piece of roasted meat. And he, thinking straightway to escape from the pit, leaps in exulting ; and for him there is no more any return prepared. Thus they use in the alluvial thirsty ^b land of the Libyans.

warfare of the hunt ; since their bright-eyed horses are swiftest in running and stubborn to fight amain, and they alone endure to face the Lion's roar, while other horses tremble and turn away their eyes, fearing the fiery eye of their lord the Lion : as I said before^a when I sang of horses. Men on foot spread the circling hedge of flax, building up the nets on close-set stakes. And the wings on either side project forward as much as doth the horn of the new-born moon. Three hunters lie in ambush by the nets, one in the middle, the other two at the extreme corners, at such distance that when the man in the middle calls to them the men on the wings can hear. The others take their station after the manner of bloody war, holding in their hands on either side dry flaming torches. And each man of them holds a shield in his left hand—in the din of the shield there is great terror for deadly beasts—and in his right hand a blazing torch^b of pine ; for, above all, the well-maned Lion dreads the might of fire,^c and will not look on it with unflinching eyes.^d And when they see the lions of valiant heart the horsemen all rush on together, and the men on foot follow with them making a din, and the noise goes unto heaven. And the beasts abide them not, but turn and flee, gnashing their teeth with rage but unwilling to fight. And even as in the night crafty fishermen in their swift ships guide the fish toward their nets, carrying blazing torches ^a; and the fishes tremble to behold them and do not abide the whirling gleam; so the kings of beasts shut their eyes and then, fearing the din of men and the flame of torches, of their own motion they approach the plaited flanks of the nets.

There is a third manner of hunting among the Ethiopians, untiring, marvellous. And this do four valiant Ethiopians perform, trusting in their valour. They fashion with twisted withes plaited shields, strong and with round sides, and stretch dried ox-hides over the bossy shields to be a defence at once against strong claws and murderous jaws. They themselves array all their bodies in the fleeces of sheep, fastening them above with close-set straps. Helmets cover their heads; only their lips and nostrils and shining eyes could you see. And they go together to chase the beast, flashing in the air many a sounding whip. But the Lion leaps forth from his cave unflinchingly and opens his deadly gape in the face of the men and utters his roar, while with his bright eyes he looks blazing fire, blustering in his wrath like the thunder-bolts of Zeus. Not Ganges' stream, which sunward over the Indian land passes the Maryandean ^b people, bellows with such stupendous roar when it leaps forth from the precipices and covers the dark space of the shore; that stream which, although it is exceeding broad, yet by twenty other rivers is it swollen and arches the crest of its furious flood; not Ganges roars so loud as roar the boundless wood and the ravines with

^a αὖ ἐρύων, i.e. αὐτερύων, i.e. ἀντερύων, from ἀνά + ἐρύω. In Homer the verb occurs (1) with reference to sacrifices (Il. i. 459, ii. 422 αὐτέρυσσαν μὲν πρῶτα), where scholl. interpret it of drawing the victim's head backward and upward, (2) of the deadly bellowing of the Lion, and all the sky resounds. And he straightway rushes, fain to glut him with flesh, like unto a winter storm, while the hunters steadfastly abide the onset of the fiery tempest. He with claws and deadly jaws incontinently assails and mauls any man that he can seize. Then another of the youths rushes on him from behind and calls his attention with clattering din and loud shout. And swiftly the lordly well-maned Lion turns and charges, leaving the man whom he had seized in his mouth ; and again another on the flank provokes the bearded swarthy beast. Others on this side and on that in close succession harass him, trusting in hides and shields and baldricks, which neither the mighty teeth of his jaws can cleave nor the points of his iron claws pierce. And the Lion wears out his strength in vain labour, charging blindly—leaving one man, lifting another straightway from the ground and wrenching his neck,^a and again incontinently rushing straight upon another. And as when in war a hostile ring of fierce battle surrounds a mighty warrior, and he, breathing the spirit of war, rushes this way and that, brandishing in his hand his gory sword, and at last a warlike company of men overcomes him, all pressing on him together, and he sinks to the ground, smitten by many long whistling arrows ; even so the Lion, exhausted by ineffectual efforts, at last yields to the men all the prizes of battle, while he sheds to earth^b the bloody drawing a bow (Il. viii. 325 αὐερύοντα παρ' ὠμόν), (3) of pulling up the palisade (στῆλαι) of a wall (Il. xii. 261). To Oppian it was probably two words.

^b σχερόν appears to mean “ground,” cf. Hesych. σχερός· ἀκτή, αἰγιαλός, which would equate it with ξερὸν ἡπείροιο (Hom. Od. v. 402).

foam and, like one ashamed, fixes his eye upon the ground. As a man who hath won many a crown of wild olive for boxing in the games, when he is overcome with wound on wound by a valiant adversary in close combat, stands at first bathed in torrents of blood, as if reeling with drink, and hanging his head to one side ; then his legs give way and he is stretched upon the ground ; even so the Lion stretches his exhausted limbs upon the sand. Then the hunters busy themselves much more, and, swiftly pressing all upon him, they bind him with strong bonds, while he makes no attempt to escape but is altogether quiet and motionless. O greatly daring men ! what a feat they compass, what a deed they do—they carry off that great monster like a tame sheep !

I have heard that with trenches and like devices men capture also the bold Jackals and deceive the tribes of Leopards ^a : only with much smaller trenches, and they cut not a pillar of stone but a beam of oak. And they do not hang aloft a kid,^b but a puppy, the privy parts of which they bind with thin straps. In its agony it straightway howls and barks, and its cry is heard by the Leopards. The Leopard rejoices and rushes straight through the wood. As when fishermen set up a weel to ensnare fish, plaiting it of Salaminian broom,^c and in the inside of it put a Poulpe^d or Grey Mullet^e roasted in the fire ; the savour thereof comes unto the flat ledges and brings

^a In more restricted sense ὡσχο(δσχο)-φόροι were two youths of each tribe chosen from noble families (τῶν γένει καὶ πλούτῳ προεχόντων Suid. s.v.), who, dressed in female garb (ἐν γυναικείαις στολαῖς E. M. s.v., Procl. ap. Phot. p. 322 n.) led the procession of women at the Oschophoria from temple of Dionysus to temple of Athena Sciras at Phalerum (Hesych. s. ὡσχοφόριον), carrying ὡσχοι (ωσχαι, δσχοι), i.e. vine-branches laden with grapes; cf. schol. Nicand. A. 109 δσχοφόροι λέγονται Ἀθήνησι παῖδες ἀμφιθαλεῖς (i.e. having both parents alive; cf. Callim. the fishes of their own will to the weel, and they are unable to get out again and meet a terrible death ; so the Leopard, hearing the puppy from afar, runs and makes his spring, suspecting no guile, and obeying the call of hunger, enters the recesses of the pit.

Leopards are overcome also by the gifts of Dionysus, when crafty hunters pour for them the crafty draught, shunning not the anger of holy Dionysus. Leopards are now a race of wild beasts, but aforetime they were not fierce wild beasts but bright-eyed women, wine-drinking, carriers of the vine branch,^a celebrators of the triennial festival,^b flower-crowned, nurses of frenzied Bacchus who rouses the dance. For Ino,^c scion of Agenor, reared the infant Bacchus and first gave her breast to the son of Zeus, and Autonoe likewise and Agave joined in nursing him, but not in the baleful halls of Athamas,^d but on the mountain which at that time men called by the name of the Thigh (Μηρός).^e For greatly fearing Dionysus (Bacchus), died at his birth and the child was conveyed by Hermes to Ino (Apollod. iii. 4. 3).

^d Athamas, s. of Aeolus and king of Boeotia, married Ino as his second wife.

^e When Dionysus was born untimely, Zeus sewed the infant in his thigh (μηρός). After Athamas and Ino, driven mad by Hera, had slain their children, Hermes conveyed the child Dionysus πρὸς νύμφας ἐν Νύσῃ κατοικούσας τῆς Ἀσίας (Apollod. l.c.) and the name Meros was given to a hill there. The location of Meros thus depends on the location of Nysa which is usually placed in India; Strabo 687 Νυσαῖος δῆ τινας ἔθνος προσωνόμοσαν καὶ πόλιν παρ' αὐτοῖς Νῦσαν Διονύσου κτίσμα καὶ δρός τὸ ὑπέρ τῆς πόλεως Μηρόν; Plin. vi. 79 Nysam urbem plerique Indiae adscribunt montemque Merum Libero Patri sacrum, unde origo fabulae Iovis feminine editum; cf. id. xvi. 144; Solin. lii. 16; Dion. P. 1159. But there were other localizations; see note on 251 below.

^a King of Thebes, s. of Echion and Agave, opposed the worship of Dionysus. Spying upon the Bacchants on Cithaeron he was torn in pieces by his mother who mistook him for a wild beast (Apollod. iii. 5. 2).

^b The prosody of κλαυθμυρισμῶν is no reason for altering the text. It is no worse than Lucan's "distincta zmaragdo" (x. 121), cf. Mart. v. 11. 1, and even Homer has ὑλήεντι Ζακύνθῳ and the like.

^e i.e. Meros (241 n.). As obviously a hill in Boeotia is intended, that implies a Boeotian Nysa. Now though Nysa

the mighty spouse of Zeus and dreading the tyrant Pentheus,^a son of Echion, they laid the holy child in a coffer of pine and covered it with fawn-skins and wreathed it with clusters of the vine, in a grotto where round the child they danced the mystic dance and beat drums and clashed cymbals in their hands, to veil the cries ^b of the infant.^c It was around that hidden ark that they first showed forth their mysteries, and with them the Aonian^d women secretly took part in the rites. And they arrayed a gathering of their faithful companions to journey from that mountain^e out of the Boeotian land. For now, now was it fated that a land,^f which before was wild, should cultivate the vine at the instance of Dionysus who delivers from sorrow. Then the holy choir took up the secret coffer and wreathed it and set it on the back of an ass. And they came unto the shores of the Euripus, where they found a seafaring old man with his sons, and all together they besought the fishermen that they might cross the water in their boats. Then the old man had compassion on them and received on board the holy women. And lo ! on Diod. iv. 2 puts it μεταξὺ Φοινίκης καὶ Νεῖλου ; cf. iii. 65 ; Hom. H. xxxiii. 8 ; Steph. Byz. s. No doubt the vine is intended. Nonn. xii. 299, speaking of the vine, has ἀγριὰς ἡβώσα πολυγνάμπτοισι σέλινοις (cf. Dion. P. 1157 ἐλικές τε πολυγνάμπτης ἔλινοι), whence it might be argued that Oppian used σέλινος for vine-tendril. But (1) σέλινος (for σέλινον) seems not to occur; (2) the penult of σέλινον is long (except A.P. vii. 621. 2).

When Ceos was suffering from pestilence owing to the heat of the Dog-star, Aristaeus went there and built an altar to Zeus Icmæus, i.e. Zeus as God of Moisture, and established an annual sacrifice to Zeus and Sirius on the hills of the island. Ever after Zeus caused the benches of his boat flowered ^a the lush bindweed ^b and blooming vine ^c and ivy wreathed the stern. Now would the fishermen, cowering in god-sent terror,^d have dived into the sea, but ere that the boat came to land. And to Euboea the women came, carrying the god, and to the abode of Aristaeus,^e who dwelt in a cave on the top of a mountain at Caryae^f and who instructed the life of country-dwelling men in countless things ; he was the first to establish a flock of sheep^g ; he first pressed the fruit of the oily wild olive,^h first curdled milk with rennet, and brought the gentle beesⁱ from the oak^j and shut them up in the Etesian winds to blow for forty days after the rising of Sirius. Hence Aristaeus was worshipped in Ceos as Zeus Aristaeus (Callim. Ait. iii. 1. 33 ff. [Loeb]; Ap. Rh. ii. 516 ff.; Nonn. v. 269 f.; xiii. 279 ff.). In the present passage he seems to be conceived as dwelling in Euboea.

hives. He at that time received the infant Dionysus from the coffer of Ino and reared him in his cave and nursed him with the help of the Dryads and the Nymphs that have the bees in their keeping and the maidens of Euboea and the Aonian women. And, when Dionysus was now come to boyhood, he played with the other children ; he would cut a fennel^a stalk and smite^b the hard rocks, and from their wounds they poured for the god sweet liquor. Otherwhiles he rent rams, skins and all, and clove them piece-meal and cast the dead bodies on the ground ; and again with his hands he neatly put their limbs together, and immediately they were alive and browsed on the green pasture. And now he was attended by holy companies, and over all the earth were spread the gifts of Dionysus, son of Thyone,^c and everywhere he went about showing forth his excellence to men. Late and at last he set foot in Thebes, and all the daughters of Cadmus came to meet the son of fire. But rash Pentheus bound the hands of Dionysus that should not be bound and threatened with his own murderous hands to rend the god. He had not regard unto the white hair of Tyrian Cadmus nor to Agave grovelling at his feet, but called to his ill-fated companions to hale away the god—to hale him away and shut him up—and he drove away the choir of women. Now the guards of Pentheus thought to carry away Bromius^d in bonds of iron, and so thought the other Cadmeans ; but the bonds touched not the god. And the heart of the women worshippers was chilled, and they cast on the ground all the garlands from their temples and the holy emblems of their hands, and the cheeks of all the worshippers of Bromius flowed with tears. And straightway they cried : " Io ! blessed one, O Dionysus, kindle thou the flaming lightning of thy father and shake the earth and give us speedy vengeance on the evil tyrant. And, O son of fire, make Pentheus a bull upon the hills, make Pentheus of evil name a bull and make us ravenous wild beasts, armed with deadly claws, that, O Dionysus, we may rend him in our mouths." So spake they praying and the lord of Nysa speedily hearkened to their prayer. Pentheus he made a bull of deadly eye and arched his neck and made the horns spring from his forehead. But to the women he gave the grey eyes of a wild beast and armed their jaws and on their backs put a spotted hide like that of fawns and made them a savage race. And, by the devising of the god having changed their fair flesh, in the form of Leopards they rent Pentheus among the rocks. Such things let us sing, such things let us believe in our hearts ! But as for the deeds of the women in the glens of Cithaeron, or the tales told of those wicked mothers, alien to Dionysus, these are the impious falsehoods of minstrels.

In this fashion does some hunter with his comrades devise a snare for the Leopards which love neat wine. They choose a spring in the thirsty land of Libya, a spring which, though small, gives forth in a very waterless place abundant dark water, mysterious and unexpected ; nor does it flow onward with murmuring stream, but bubbles marvellously and remains stationary and sinks in the sands. Thereof the race of fierce Leopards come at dawn to drink. And straightway at nightfall the hunters set forth and carry with them twenty jars of sweet wine, which

The Leopards, smitten by the flaming sun, feel the call both of thirst and of the odour which they love, and they approach the Bromian spring and with widely gaping mouth lap up the wine. First they all leap about one another like dancers ; then their limbs become heavy, and they gently nod their heads downwards to the goodly earth ; then deep slumber overcomes them all and casts them here and there upon the ground. As when at a banquet youths of an age, still boys, still with the down upon their cheeks, sing sweetly and challenge each other after dinner with cup for cup ; and it is late ere they give over, and the strength of the wine is heavy on head and eye and throws them over one upon the other ; even so those wild beasts are heaped on one another and become, without mighty toil, the prey of the hunters.

dogs on leash, to seek the mazy tracks of the deadly beasts. But when the dogs descry the signs of footprints, they follow them up and guide the trackers with them, holding their long noses nigh the ground. And afterwards if they descry any fresher track, straightway they rush eagerly, giving tongue the while exultingly, forgetting the previous track. But when they reach the end of their devious tracking and come to the cunning lair of the beast, straightway the dog bounds from the hand of the hunter, pitifully barking, rejoicing in his heart exceedingly. As when a maiden in the season of milky spring roams with unsandalled feet over all the hills in search of flowers and while she is yet afar the fragrance tells her of the sweet violet ahead ; her lightsome heart is gladdened and smiles, and she gathers the flowers without stint and wreathes her head and goes singing to the house of her country-dwelling parents ; even so the stout heart of the dog is gladdened. But the hunter for all his eagerness constrains him with straps and goes back exulting to the company of his comrades. And he shows them the thicket and where himself and his helper ambushed and left the savage beast. And they hasten and set up strong stakes and spread hayes and cast nets around. On either hand in the two wings they put two men at the ends of the net^a to lie under piles of ashen boughs. From the wings themselves and the men who watch the entrance

they stretch on the left hand a well-twined long rope ^a of flax a little above the ground in such wise that the cord would reach to a man's waist. Therefrom are hung many-coloured patterned ribbons, various and bright, a scare to wild beasts, and suspended therefrom are countless bright feathers, the beautiful wings of the fowls of the air, Vultures ^b and white Swans ^c and long Storks.^d On the right hand they set ambushes in clefts of rock, or with green leaves they swiftly roof huts a little apart from one another, and in each they hide four men, covering all their bodies with branches. Now when all things are ready, the trumpet sounds its tremendous note, and the Bear leaps forth from the thicket with a sharp cry and looks sharply as she cries. And the young men rush on in a body and from either side come in battalions against the beast and drive her before

Of Vultures two species are distinguished : A. 592 b 6 τῶν δὲ γυπῶν δύο ἔστιν εἰδῆ, ὁ μὲν μικρὸς καὶ ἐκλευκότερος, ὁ δὲ μείζων καὶ σποδοειδέστερος. The former is Neophron percnopterus L., which nests in Greece, its arrival about 21st March being reckoned by shepherds as the beginning of Spring (Momms. p. 1) ; the latter Vultur fulvus Briss. and perh. V. cinereus.

^c Both Cygnus musicus, the Whistling Swan or Whooper, and C. olor, the Mute Swan, are found in Greece, but only the latter appears to nest there (Momms. pp. 286 f.).

^d Ciconia nigra and C. alba are both visitors in Greece, the latter being resident in Macedonia (Momms. pp. 285 f.).

^a Cf. i. 156. The περίδρομος is a rope passing through the meshes along the upper and lower margins of the net, which, when the game is driven in, the ambushed hunter pulls and so closes the mouth of the net. Hes. 8. περίδρομοι. τοῦ δίκτυου τὸ διειρόμενον σχοινίον; Poll. v. 28 ἔστι δὲ περίδρομος τῆς ἄρκυος σχοινίον ἐκατέρωθεν τῶν ἀνω τε καὶ κάτω βρόχων διειρόμενον, φ συνέλκεται τε τὰ δίκτυα καὶ πάλιν ἀναλύεται;

them. And she, leaving the din and the men, rushes straight where she sees an empty space of open plain. Thereupon in turn an ambush of men arises in her rear and make a clattering din, driving her to the brow of the rope and the many-coloured scare. And the wretched beast is utterly in doubt and flees distraught, fearful of all alike—the ambush of men, the din, the flute, the shouting, the scaring rope ; for with the roaring wind the ribands wave aloft in the air and the swinging feathers whistle shrill. So, glancing about her, the Bear draws nigh the net and falls into the flaxen ambush. Then the watchers at the ends of the net near at hand spring forth and speedily draw tight above the skirting cord ^a of broom. Net on net they pile ; for at that moment Bears greatly rage with jaws and terrible paws, and many a time they straightway evade the hunters and escape from the nets and make the hunting vain. But at that same moment some strong man fetters the right paw of the Bear and widows her of all her force, and binds her skilfully and ties the beast to planks of wood and encloses her again in a cage of oak and pine, after she has exercised her body in many a twist and turn.

Xen. C. 2. 4 ὑφείσθωσαν δὲ οἱ περίδρομοι ἀνάμματοι, ἵνα εὔτροχοι ὁσι. The περίδρομοι might also be attached to the net by loops (τοὺς δὲ περιδρόμους ἀπὸ στροφέων Xen. C. 2. 6; cf. Poll. v. 29 προβάλλονται δὲ τοὺς δικτύους ἀπὸ στροφέων) : Xen. C. 10. 7 τὸν περιδρουμον ἐξάπτειν ἀπὸ δένδρου ισχυροῦ. Xen. C. 6. 9 speaks of fastening the περίδρομοι to the ground (καθάπτων τοὺς περιδρόμους ἐπὶ τὴν γῆν). Here he must be referring to the skirting-rope at the lower margin of the net from which the upper rope was sometimes distinguished as ἐπίδρομος : Poll. v. 29 τινὲς δὲ τούτους ἐπιδρόμους ὠνόμασαν, οἱ δὲ δύο ὄντων τὸν μὲν ἐκ τοῦ κάτω περιδρομον, ἐπιδρομον δὲ τὸν ἄνωθεν.

^d i.e. their feet are caked with mud. The metaphor is

In hunting the swift-footed tribes of the Hare the hunter should run in front and head them off from upward-sloping rock or hill and with cunning prudence drive them downhill. For the moment that they see hounds and huntsmen they rush uphill^a; since they well know that their forelegs^b are shorter. Hence hills are easy for Hares—easy for Hares but difficult for mounted men. Moreover, the hunter should avoid much-trodden ways and the beaten track and pursue them in the tilled fields. For on the trodden way they are nimbler and light of foot and easily rush on. But on the ploughed land their feet are heavy in summer and in the winter^c season they carry a fatal shoe^d that reaches to the ankle.

If ever thou art hunting a Gazelle, beware that after a very long and extended course and term of toil it do not halt a moment and relieve^e nature. For in Gazelles beyond all others the bladder swells in the midst of their course and their flanks are burdened by involuntary waters and they squat upon their haunches. But if they take breath a little with their noisy throats, they flee far more strongly and more swiftly with nimble knees and lighter loins.

The Fox is not to be captured by ambush nor by illustrated by the use of κρητίς to mean a species of cake ἐξ ἀλεύρου καὶ μέλιτος Poll. vi. 77.

HALIEUTICA, OR FISHING

THE tribes of the sea and the far scattered ranks of all manner of fishes, the swimming brood of Amphitrite, will I declare, O Antoninus,^a sovereign majesty of earth ; all that inhabit the watery flood and where each dwells, their mating in the waters and their birth, the life of fishes, their hates, their loves, their wiles,^b and the crafty devices of the cunning fisher's art—even all that men have devised against the baffling fishes. Over the unknown sea they sail with daring heart and they have beheld the unseen deeps and by their arts have mapped out the measures of the sea, men more than human. The mountain-bred Boar and the Bear the hunter sees, and, when he confronts him watches him openly, whether to shoot him afar or slay him at close quarters. Both beast and man fight securely on the land, and the hounds go with the hunter as guides to mark the quarry and direct their masters to the very lair and attend close at hand as helpers. To them winter brings no great fear, nor summer brings burning heat ; for hunters have many shelters—shady thickets and cliffs and caves in the rock self-roofed ; many a silvery river, too, stretching through the hills to quench thirst and dispense a never-failing bath ; and by the green-fringed streams are low beds of grass, a soft couch in sunny weather for sleep after toil, and seasonable repast to eat of woodland fruits which grow abundant on the hills. Pleasure more than sweat attends the hunt. And those who prepare destruction for birds, easy for them too and visible is their prey. For some they capture unawares asleep upon their nests ^a ; others they take with limed reeds ; others fall of themselves into the fine-plaited nets, seeking for a bed, and a woeful roost they find. But for the toilsome fishermen their labours are uncertain,^b and unstable as a dream is the hope that flatters their hearts. For not upon the moveless^c land do they labour, but always they have to encounter the chill and wildly raging water, which even to behold from the land brings terror and to essay it only with the eyes. In tiny barks they wander obsequious to the stormy winds, their minds ever on the surging waves ; always they scan the dark clouds and ever tremble at the blackening tract of sea ; no shelter have they from the raging winds nor any defence against the rain nor bulwark against summer heat. Moreover, they shudder at the terrors awful to behold of the grim sea, even the Sea-monsters ^d which encounter them when they traverse the secret places of the deep. ^a ἐν τῷ βιβαρίῳ schol. The reference is to a royal marine fish-preserve. Such a fish-preserve, which might be either in fresh or salt water, was called by the Romans piscina (Varro, iii. 17. 2 cum piscinarum genera sint duo, dulcium et salsarum, alterum apud plebem et non sine fructu, ubi lymphae aquam piscibus nostris villaticis ministrant: illae autem maritimae piscinae nobilium, quibus Neptunus et aquam et pisces ministrat, cf. iii. 3. 2 ff., 17. 2; Plin. x. 193; Colum. i. 6. 21, 8. 17) or vivarium (M.G. βιβάριον), a more general term, applicable to any preserve for wild creatures.

path—for the tracks of the swimming tribes are unseen—nor do they see where the fish will encounter them and come within range of capture; for not by one path does the fish travel. In feeble hairs and bent hooks of bronze and in reeds and nets the fishers have their strength.

Yet not bereft of pleasure art thou, if pleasure thou desirest, but sweet is the royal sport. A ship well-riveted, well-benched, light exceedingly, the young men drive with racing oars smiting the back of the sea; and at the stern the best man as steersman guides the ship, steady and true, to a wide space of gently heaving waves; and there feed^a infinite tribes of feasting fishes which thy servants ever tend, fattening them with abundant food, a ready choir of spoil for thee, O blessed one, and for thy glorious son, the flock of your capture. For straightway thou lettest from thy hand into the sea the well-woven line, and the fish quickly meets and seizes the hook of bronze and is speedily haled forth—not all unwilling—by our king;^b and thy heart is gladdened, O Lord of earth. For great delight it is for eye and mind to see the captive fish tossing and turning.

But be thou gracious unto me, thou who art king in the tract of the sea, wide-ruling son of Cronus,^a Girdler of the earth, and be gracious thyself, O Sea, and ye gods who in the sounding sea have your abode ; and grant me to tell of your herds and sea-bred tribes ; and do thou, O lady Goddess, direct all and make these gifts of thy song well pleasing to our sovereign lord and to his son.

Infinite and beyond ken are the tribes that move and swim in the depths of the sea, and none could name them certainly ; for no man hath reached the limit of the sea, but unto three hundred fathoms ^a less or more men know and have explored the deep. But, since the sea is infinite and of unmeasured depth, many things are hidden, and of these dark things none that is mortal can tell ; for small are the understanding and the strength of men. The briny sea feeds not, I ween, fewer herds nor lesser tribes than earth, mother of many. But whether the tale of offspring be debatable between them both, or whether one excels the other, the gods know certainly ; but we must make our reckoning by our human wits.

Now fishes differ in breed and habit and in their path in the sea, and not all fishes have like range. For some keep by the low shores, feeding on sand and whatever things grow in the sand ; to wit, the Sea-horse,^b the swift Cuckoo-fish,^c the yellow its resemblance to the Red Mullet. Marc. S. 21 ὁξύκομοι κόκκινες in allusion to the dorsal spines which they erect on being touched (Day i. p. 55) ; A. 598 a 15 ἐπαυφοτερίζουσιν, i.e. found both in deep and shallow water ; 535 b 20 "utters a sound like the cuckoo, whence its name." Cf. Ael. x. 11. The noise made by Gurnards when taken from the water is due to escape of gas from the air-bladder. Apost. p. 11 (where he identifies Aristotle's κόκκινξ with the allied Dactylopterus volitans Mor.) enumerates eight species of Trigla found in Greek waters.

seas, and they attend them as convoyers, voyaging with them on this side and on that, gambolling around and about the well-benched chariot of the sea, about both sides and about the controlling helm at the stern, while others gather round the prow ; not of their own motion thou wouldest say that they voyage, but rather entangled in the well-riveted timbers are pulled against their will as in chains and carried along perforce ; so great a swarm does their passion for hollow ships collect. Even as a city-saving king or some athlete crowned with fresh garlands is beset by boys and youths and men who lead him to his house and attend him always in troops until he passes the fencing threshold of his halls, even so the Pilot-fishes always attend swift-faring ships, so long as no fear of the earth drives them away. But when they mark the dry land—and greatly do they abhor the solid earth—they all turn back again in a body and rush away as from the starting-post and follow the ships no more. This is a true sign to sailors that they are near land, when they see those companions of their voyage leaving them. O Pilot-fish, honoured of seafarers, by thee doth a man divine the coming of temperate winds ; for with fair weather thou dost put to sea and fair weather signs thou shovest forth.

Companion of the open seas likewise is the Echeneis.^a It is slender of aspect, in length a cubit, its colour dusky, its nature like that of the eel ; under its head its mouth slopes sharp and crooked, like the barb of a curved hook. A marvellous thing have mariners remarked of the slippery Echeneis, hearing which a man would refuse to believe it in his heart ; for always the mind of inexperienced men is hard to persuade, and they will not believe even the truth. When a ship is straining under stress of a strong wind, running with spread sails over the spaces of the sea, the fish gapes its tiny mouth and stays all the ship underneath, constraining it below the keel ; and it cleaves the waves no more for all its haste but is firmly stayed, even as if it were shut up in a tideless harbour. All its canvas groans upon the forestays, the ropes creak, the yard-arm bends under the stress of the breeze, and on the stern the steersman gives every rein to the ship, urging her to her briny path. But she nor heeds the helm nor obeys the winds nor is driven by the waves but, fixed fast, remains against her will and is fettered for all her haste, rooted on the mouth of a feeble fish. And the sailors tremble to see the mysterious bonds of the sea, beholding a marvel like unto a dream. As when in the woods a hunter lies in wait for a swift-running Deer and smites her with winged arrow on the leg and stays her in her course ; and she for all her haste, transfixed with compelling pain, unwillingly awaits the bold hunter ; even such a fetter doth the spotted fish cast about the ship which it encounters, and from such deeds it gets its name.

^a Clupea sardina Cuv. (Alosa sardina Moreau). The precise identification is uncertain. Aristotle's references to χαλκὶς are perplexing, but Oppian's fish is probably intended in A. 543 a 2, 621 b 7, 602 b 28. Plin. ix. 154 adeoque nihil non gignitur in mari ut cauponarum etiam aestiva animalia pernici molesta saltu aut quae capillus maxime celat existant et circumglobatae escae saepe extrahantur . . . quibusdam vero ipsis innascuntur, quo in numero chalcis accipitur; Athen. 328 c χαλκίδες καὶ τὰ δμοια, θρίσσαι, τριχίδες, ἐρίτιμοι; ibid. 328 f Ἐπαλνετος . . . φησι . . . χαλκίδας ἂς καλοῦσι καὶ σαρδίνους. Cf. Athen. 329 a 355 f; Ael. i. 58.

^b A. 621 b 15 οὐ γίνεται δ' ἐν τῷ εὐρίπῳ (of Pyrrha in Lesbos A. 621 b 12: Strabo 617 τὸν Πυρραῖων εὔριπον, cf. Plin. v. 139) οὗτε σκάρος οὗτε θρίττα οὗτε ἄλλο τῶν ἀκανθηροτέρων οὐθέν; Thritta Plin. xxxii. 151. It is clear from Athen. 328 c-329 b that it is a Clupeid, or member of the Herring family,

The Pilchard^a again and the Shad^b and the Abramis^c move in shoals, now in one path of the sea, now in another, round rocks or in the open sea, and they also run to the long shores, ever changing to a strange path like wanderers.

The range of the Anthias^d is most familiar to the deep rocks ; yet no wise do they always dwell among these, but wander everywhere as they are bidden by their jaws, their belly and their gluttonous desire insatiate of food ; for beyond others a voracious passion drives those fishes, albeit the space of their mouth is toothless. Four mighty tribes of the Anthias inhabit the sea, the yellow, the white, and, a third breed, the black ; others men call Euopus and Aulopus, because they have a circular dark brow ringed above their eyes.

like χαλκίς and τριχίς. Athen. 328 b θρισσῶν δὲ μέμνηται Ἀριστοτέλης ἐν τῷ περὶ ἵχθυν καὶ ἰχθύων ἐν τούτοις “ μόνιμα (? μαῖνα) θρίσσα, ἔγκρασίχολος, μεμβράς, κορακῖνος, ἐρυθρῖνος, τριχίς ” ; 328 f τῶν δὲ λεγομένων ἔσθ’ δτι ἡδεται ὄρχήσει καὶ φόδῃ (ἢ τριχίς) καὶ ἀκούσασα ἀναπηδᾷ ἐκ τῆς θαλάσσης, cf. Plut. Mor. 961 e where the same is said of the θρίσσα : καὶ τὴν θρίσσαν ἀδόντων καὶ κροτούντων ἀναδύεσθαι καὶ προιέναι λέγουσιν. Perhaps the Shad, Alosa vulgaris, which is anadromous (Athen. 328 e Δωρίων δ’ ἐν τῷ περὶ ἵχθυν καὶ τῆς ποταμίας μέμνηται θρίσσης καὶ τὴν τριχίδα τριχίαν ὀνομάζει ; Auson. Mosell. 127 Stridentesque focis, obsonia plebis, alausas) or the nearly allied Sardinella aurita, M.G. θρίσσα, φρίσσα (Apost. p. 24). The schol. θρίσσαι δύο εἶδοι ἔχθινοι οἱ τριχαῖοι καὶ ἔτερον ὅμοιον σκόμβρῳ ἢ μικρότερον rather suggests the Twaite Shad (Alosa finta) and the larger Allis Shad (A. vulgaris).

^a Mentioned among Nile fishes Athen. 312 b (along with θρίσσα). Salted Abramis (ἀβραΐδια) are mentioned Xenocr. De aliment. 36. Schemseddin Mohammed, an Arabic writer of XVI. cent., gives abermis as the old name for modern bouri = Mugil cephalus (Grey Mullet) which was salted and exported from Egypt. Schneider's Artedi Synonymia piscium, p. 322.

'Εν κείνῃ γενεῇ καὶ καρκίνοι εἰσὶν ἀλῆται 280

^a Here Oppian begins his account of μαλακόστρακα or Crustaceans; cf. A. 523 b 5 ἐν δὲ τῶν μαλακοστράκων ταῦτα δ' ἔστιν δισων ἐκτὸς τὸ στερεόν, ἐντὸς δὲ τὸ μαλακὸν καὶ σαρκῶδες· τὸ δὲ σκληρὸν αὐτῶν ἔστιν οὐ θραυστὸν ἄλλὰ θλαστόν, οἷόν ἔστι τὸ τῶν καράβων καὶ τὸ τῶν καρκίνων. In this class A. includes ἀστακός, κάραβος, καρψ, various species of καρκίνος (πάγουρος, πιννοφύλαξ, etc.) and two species of καρκίνιον or Hermit-crab. Plin. ix. 83 piscium sanguine carent de quibus dicemus. Sunt autem tria genera: in primis quae mollia [=μαλάκια,

Two ^a fishes whose limbs are fenced with hard coats swim in the gulfs of the sea ; to wit, the Spiny Crayfish ^b and the Lobster.^c Both these dwell among the rocks and among the rocks they feed. The Lobster again holds in his heart a love exceeding and unspeakable for his own lair and he never leaves it willingly, but if one drag him away by force and carry him elsewhere far away and let him go again in the sea, in no long time he returns to his own cleft eagerly, and will not choose a strange retreat nor does he heed any other rock but seeks the home that he left and his native haunts and his feeding-ground in the brine which fed him before, and leaves not the sea from which seafaring fishermen estranged him. Thus even to the swimming tribes their own house and their native sea and the home place where they were born instil in their hearts a sweet delight, and it is not to mortal men only that their fatherland is dearest of all ; and there is nothing more painful or more terrible then when a man perforce lives the grievous life of an exile from his native land, a stranger among aliens bearing the yoke of dishonour.

In that kind are also the wandering Crab ^d and the herds of the Prawn ^a and the shameless tribes of the Pagurus,^b whose lot is numbered with the amphibians.^c

All those whose body is set beneath a shell put off the old shell ^d and another springs up from the nether flesh. The Pagurus, when they feel the violence of the rending shell, rush everywhere in their desire for food, that the separation of the slough may be easier when they have sated themselves. But when the sheath is rent and slips off, then at first they lie idly stretched upon the sands, mindful neither of food nor of aught else, thinking to be numbered with the dead and to breathe warm breath no more, and they tremble for their new-grown tender hide. Afterwards they recover their spirits again and take a little courage and eat of the sand ; but they are weak and helpless of heart until a new shelter is compacted about their limbs. Even as when a physician tends a man who is laden with disease, in the first days he keeps him from tasting food, blunting the fierceness of his malady, and then he gives him a little food for the sick, until he has cleared away all his distress and his limb-devouring aches and pains ; even so they retire, fearing for their new-grown shells, to escape the evil fates of disease.

Other reptiles dwell in the haunts of the sea, the crooked Poulpe ^e and the Water-newt ^f and the Scolopendra,^g abhorred by fishermen, and the

The Hermit-crabs have no shell of their own from birth, but are born naked ^a and unprotected and weak; yet they devise for themselves an acquired home, covering their feeble bodies with a bastard shelter. For when they see a shell left all desolate, the tenant having left his home, they creep in below the alien mantle and settle there and dwell and take it for their home. And along with it they travel and move their shelter from within—whether ^b it be some Nerites that hath left the shell or a Trumpet or a Strombus. Most of all they love the shelters of the Strombus, because these are wide ^c and light to carry. But when the Hermit-crab within grows ^d and fills the cavity, it keeps that house no longer, but leaves it and seeks a wider shell-vessel to put on. Ofttimes battle arises and great contention among the Hermit-crabs about a hollow shell and the stronger drives out the weaker and herself puts on the fitting house.

One fish there is covered with a hollow shell, like in form to the Poulpe, which men call the Nautilus,^e so named because it sails of itself. It dwells in the sands and it rises to the surface of the water face downwards, so that the sea may not fill it. But when it swims above the waves of Amphitrite, straightway it turns over and sails like a man skilled in sailing a boat. Two feet it stretches aloft by way of rigging and between these runs like a sail a fine membrane which is stretched by the wind ; but underneath two feet touching the water, like rudders, guide and direct house and ship and fish. But when it fears some evil hard at hand, no longer does it trust the winds in its flight, but gathers in all its tackle, sails and rudders, and receives the full flood within and is weighed down and sunk by the rush of water. Ah ! whosoever first invented ships, the chariots of the sea, whether it was some god that devised them or whether some daring mortal first boasted to have crossed the wave, surely it was when he had seen that voyaging of a fish that he framed a like work in wood, spreading from the forestays those parts to catch the wind and those behind to control the ship.

The Sea-monsters ^a mighty of limb and huge, the wonders of the sea, heavy with strength invincible, a terror for the eyes to behold and ever armed with deadly rage—many of these there be that roam the spacious seas, where are the unmapped prospects of Poseidon, but few of them come nigh the shore, those only whose weight the beaches can bear and whom the salt water does not fail. Scymnus,^a the Smooth Dog-fish,^b the Spiny Dog-fish^c; and among them are the Angel-shark,^d the Fox-shark^e and the Spotted Dog-fish.^f But the works and the feeding of them all is alike and they herd together.

The Dolphins both rejoice in the echoing shores and dwell in the deep seas, and there is no sea without Dolphins; for Poseidon loves them exceedingly, inasmuch as when he was seeking the dark-eyed daughter^g of Nereus who fled from his embraces, the Dolphin marked her hiding in the halls of Ocean and told Poseidon; and the god of the dark hair straightway carried off the maiden and overcame her against her will. Her he made his bride, queen of the sea, and for their tidings he commended his kindly attendants and bestowed on them exceeding honour for their portion.

There are also those among the stern Sea-monsters which leave the salt water and come forth upon the life-giving soil of the dry land. For a long space do Eels^h consort with the shores and the fields beside

He who receives in his ears their voice of sorrow, shall soon be not far from death, but that dread sound prophesies for him doom and death. Nay, even the shameless Whale,^d they say, leaves the sea for the dry land and basks in the sun. And Seals ^e in the night-time always leave the sea, and often in the day-time they abide at their ease on the rocks and on the sands and take their sleep outside the sea.

what loving-kindness, although thou hast marked out and divided the bright sky and the air and the fluid water and earth, mother of all, and established them apart each from the other, yet hast thou bound them all one to another in a bond of amity that may not be broken and set them perforce under a common yoke not to be removed! For neither is the sky without air nor the air without water nor is the water sundered from the earth, but they inhere each in the other, and all travel one path and revolve in one cycle of change. Therefore also they pledge one another in the common race of the amphibians ;^a of whom some come up from the sea to the land ; others again go down from the air to consort with the sea ; to wit, the light Gulls^b and the plaintive tribes of the Kingfisher^c and the strong rapacious Sea-eagle,^d and whatsoever others there be that fish and seek their prey in the water. Others again, though they are dwellers in the sea, plough the air ; to wit, the Calamaries^e and the race of Sea-hawks^f and the Swallow^g of the deep. These, when they fear a mightier fish at hand, leap from the sea and fly in the air. But while the Calamaries ply the wing high and far—a bird you would think you were seeing, not a fish, when they set themselves in shoals to fly—the Swallows keep a lower path and the Hawks

These are the city-states, as it were, among fishes, these the various communities of the sea-wandering race. In winter ^e all dread exceedingly the terrible eddies of the storm-winds and the billows of the evil-sounding sea itself: for beyond all else the fishy tribes abhor their beloved sea when it rages. Then do some with their fins scrape the sand ^f together and skulk like cowards beneath it, others creep below the rocks ^g where they huddle together, others flee down to the nether depths of the deepest ^h seas; for those seas neither roll overmuch nor are stirred to the bottom by the winds and no blast penetrates the nether foundation of the sea; and the great depth protects the fishes from the pangs of cold and the cruel assault of winter. But when the flowery hours of spring smile brightly on the earth and with fine weather the sea has respite from winter and there is calm water with a gentle swell, then from this quarter and from that the fishes come trooping joyfully nigh the land. As when, happily escaped from the cloud of ruinous war, some city dear to the deathless gods, which long time the brazen storm of foemen beset as with a flood, at last ceases gladly from strife and recovers her breath ; she rejoices and takes her delight in the eager labours of peace and in calm weather holds festival, full of the dancing of men and women ; even so the fishes, gladly escaped from sorrowful affliction and rough seas, rush exultant over the wave, leaping like dancers. And in spring the sweet goad of compelling desire and mating and mutual love are in season among all that move upon the fruitful earth and in the folds of air and in the bellowing sea. In spring ^a the Birth-goddesses deliver most part of the fishes from the heavy travail of spawning. The female, in their desire to give birth and to bring forth, rub their tender bellies in the sand ; for the eggs do not part easily but are closely entangled together within the belly, confusedly cohering—how could they bring forth the mass ?—and, painfully straitened, they with difficulty pass their spawn. So not even on the fishes have the Fates bestowed easy birth, and not alone to women upon earth are there pains, but everywhere the birth-pangs are grievous. As for the males, on the other hand, some hasten to approach the shores, bringing doom to other fishes on which they feast ; others again run before the shoals of females by whom they are pursued, since drawn by the passion of desire the females haste after the males ^a with rush incontinent. Then the males, rubbing belly against belly,^b discharge behind them the moist milt ; and the females, goaded by desire, rush to gobble ^c it up with their mouths ; by such mating they are filled with roe. This is the most common custom among fishes, but others there are which have separate and apart their own beds and bridal chambers and wedded wives ; for there is much Passion among fishes and Desire and Jealousy, that grievous god, and all that hot Love brings forth, when he stirs fierce tumult in the heart. Many quarrel with one another and fight over a mate, like unto wooers who about a bride gather many and well-matched and contend in wealth and beauty. These weapons the fish have not, but strength and jaws and sawlike teeth within : with these they enter the lists and arm themselves to win a mate ; and he who excels with these, wins at once both victory and mate. And some delight in more mates than one to share their bed, to wit, the race of the Sargue ^d and the dusky Merle ^e ; others love and attend a single mate, as the Black Sea-bream ^f and the Aetnaeus ^g and delight not in more than one.

But neither Eels ^a nor Turtles nor Poulpes effect their mating in this fashion, nor the dark Muraena, but they have an unusual mode of union. Eels coil round one another and closely entwined they writhe their moist bodies, and from them a fluid like foam flows and is covered by the sands ; and the mud receives it and conceives, and gives birth to the trailing Eel. Such also is the generation of the slippery ^b Conger.

The Turtles greatly fear and hate their mating ; ^c for they have no delight or pleasure in union, as other creatures have, but they have far more pain. For the organ of the male is very hard, an unyielding bone, which is whetted in a joyless union. Therefore they fight and rend each other with their bent teeth, when they come together : the females seeking to avoid the rough mating, the males eager to mate, willing bridegrooms of unwilling brides ; until the male by his strength prevails and makes her perforce his mate, like a captive bride, the prize of war. The mating of Dogs on land is similar to that of Turtles in the sea : similar also is that of Seals ^d ; for all of those remain a long time coupled rearwards, fast bound as by a chain.

For the Poulpe ^e his deadly mating goes with bitter destruction and union consummated is confestucam aliquam imponat aversae. For mode of mating, A. 540 a 28 τὰ μὲν γὰρ ἐπιβαίνοντα . . . οἷον χελώνη καὶ ἡ θαλαττία καὶ ἡ χερσαῖα ; Plin. ix. 158 Testudines in coitu superveniunt.

summated death : for he does not abstain or cease from his desire, until he is spent and strength forsakes his limbs and he himself falls exhausted on the sand and perishes. For all that come nigh devour^a him—the timid Hermit-crab and the Crabs and other fishes which he himself formerly was wont to banquet on, easily stealing upon them ; by these he is now devoured, still alive but lying helplessly, and making no resistance, until he dies. By such a death, the sad fruit of desire, he perishes. And even so the female^b likewise perishes, exhausted by the travail of birth. For their eggs do not issue forth separately, as with other fishes, but, clustered together like grapes,^c they pass with difficulty through the narrow channel. Wherefore the Poulpes never live beyond the measure of a year^d ; for always they perish by dreadest mating and dreadest travail of birth.

Touching the Muraena there is a not obscure report^e that a Serpent mates with her, and that the Muraena herself comes forth from the sea willingly, eager mate to eager mate. The bitter Serpent, whetted by the fiery passion within him, is frenzied for mating and drags himself nigh the shore ; and anon he espies a hollow rock and therein vomits forth his baneful venom, the fierce bile of his teeth, a deadly store, that he may be mild and serene to meet his bride. Standing on the shore he utters his hissing note, his mating call ; and the dusky Muraena quickly hears his cry and speeds swifter than an arrow. She stretches her from the sea, he from the land treads the grey surf, and, eager to mate with one another, the two embrace, and the panting bride receives with open mouth the Serpent's head. Then, exulting over their union, she goes back again to her haunts in the sea, while he makes his trailing way to the land, where he takes in again his venom, lapping up that which before he shed and discharged from his teeth. But if he find not that bile—which some wayfarer, seeing it for what it is, has washed away with torrents of water—then indignant he dashes his body, till he finds the doom of a sad and unthought-of death, ashamed to be a Serpent when he is left defenceless of the weapons in which he trusted, and on the rock with his lost venom he loses his life.

Dolphins ^a mate after the manner of men, and the organs with which they are equipped are quite human-like ; the male organ is not always visible but is hidden within and extended on occasion of mating.

Such are the loves and mating among fishes. And others at other season ^b they desire to mate and bring forth their young ; for some summer, for some winter, for others spring or waning autumn brings birth. And some—the greatest part—are in travail of a single brood a year, but the Basse is twice ^c

When in spring the oviparous fishes are full of roe, some of them remain quietly in their homes, each tribe in its own place ; but many gather together and pursue a common path to the Euxine Sea,^e that there they may bring forth their brood. For that gulf is the sweetest of all the sea, watered as it is by infinite rivers of abundant water ; and it has soft and sandy bays ; therein are goodly feeding-grounds and waveless shores and caverned rocks and silty clefts and shady headlands and all that fish most love ; but no fierce Sea-monster inhabits there nor any deadly bane of the finny race nor any of those which prey upon the smaller fishes—no coiling

Poulpe nor Lobster nor Crab ^a; Dolphins, indeed, dwell there but few, and feebler even these than the Sea-monster breed and harmless. Wherefore to fishes that water is pleasant exceedingly and they greatly haste to come to it. ^d E. Forbes, op. cit. p. 201 "Some of the rivers which discharge into the Black Sea take their rise in high latitudes, in districts annually covered with snow. These rivers also are annually frozen. Again, the winter temperature of the northern shores of this sea is such that coast ice forms there, as also in the Sea of Azof; and hence the waters of the Black Sea are much colder than those of the rest of the marine province to which it belongs. It is to the combined influence of composition and temperature that the great difference in the assemblage of animals in the Mediterranean and Black Seas must be attributed. The Black Sea is the race of the feeble Pygmies^a: as they fly in ordered ranks^b their broad swarms shadow the air and keep unbroken line; even so in that season those myriad-tribed phalanxes of the sea plough the great waves of the Euxine; and the sea is full to overflowing and rough with the beating of many fins, till eagerly they win rest from their long journey and their spawning. But when the term of autumn^c passes, they bethink them of their homeward way, since chillier^d than all other is the winter that rages on that eddying sea; for it is not deep offshore^e but is easily buffeted about by the winds which beat upon it violent and deadly. Wherefore they slip away from the Amazonian mere^f and with their young travel home again, and scatter over the sea, each tribe to the place where they are to feed.

Now those which are called Molluscs,^g whose great ultimate estuary of the rivers which drain one-half of the European area.”

^a The story is variously told (cf. schol.). The version of Apollod. iii. 5 is: Wishing to cross from Icaria to Naxos, Dionysus hired a vessel of some Tyrrhenian pirates. Putting him on board, they sailed past Naxos and made all speed for Asia, with a view to selling him. He then turned mast and sails into snakes and filled the ship with ivy and the

by the devising of Dionysus^a they exchanged the land for the sea and put on the form of fishes^b; but even now the righteous spirit of men in them preserves human thought and human deeds. For when the twin^c offspring of their travail come into the light, straightway, soon as they are born they swim and gambol round their mother and enter within her teeth and linger in the maternal mouth; and she for her love suffers them and circles about her children gaily and exulting with exceeding joy. And she gives them her breasts,^d one to each, that they may suck the sweet milk; for god has given her milk and breasts of like nature to those of women. Thus for a season she nurses them; but, when they attain the strength of youth, straightway their mother leads them in their eagerness to the way of hunting and teaches them the art of catching fish; nor does she part from her children nor forsake them, until they have attained the fulness of their age in limb and strength, but always the parents attend^e them to keep watch and ward. What a marvel shalt thou contemplate in thy heart and what sweet delight, when on a voyage, watching when the wind is fair and the sea is calm, thou shalt see the beautiful herds of Dolphins, the desire of the sea; the young go before in a troop like youths unwed, even as if noise of flutes. The pirates, becoming mad, threw themselves into the sea and became Dolphins. Cf. Hom. H. vii.

they were going through the changing circle of a mazy dance ; behind and not aloof their children come the parents great and splendid, a guardian host, even as in spring the shepherds attend the tender lambs at pasture. As when from the works of the Muses ^a children come trooping while behind there follow, to watch them and to be censors of modesty and heart and mind, men of older years : for age makes a man discreet ; even so also the parent Dolphins attend their children, lest aught untoward encounter them.

Yea and the Seal also tends her young no less well ; for she too has breasts, and in the breasts streams of milk.^b But not amid the waves but when she comes up on the dry land ^c is she delivered of the burden of her womb in seasonable travail. For twelve days in all she remains with her children there upon the dry land ; but with the thirteenth ^d dawn she takes in her arms her young cubs and goes down into the sea, glorying in her children and showing them, as it were, their fatherland. Even as a woman that has borne a child in an alien land comes gladly to her fatherland and to her own home ; and all day long she carries her child in her arms and hugs him while she shows him the house, his mother's home, with sateless delight ; and he, though he does not understand, gazes at each thing, the hall and the haunts of his parents ; even so that wild thing of the sea brings her children to the water and shows them all the works of the deep.

Ye gods, not alone then among men are children very dear, sweeter than light or life, but in birds also and in savage beasts and in carrion fishes there is inbred, mysterious and self-taught, a keen passion for their young, and for their children they are not unwilling but heartily eager to die and to endure all manner of woeful ill. Ere now on the hills a hunter has seen a roaring Lion bestriding his young, fighting in defence of his offspring ; ^a the thick hurtling stones he heeds not nor recks of the hunter's spear but all undaunted keeps heart and spirit, though hit and torn by all manner of wounds ; nor will he shrink from the combat till he die, but even half-dead he stands over his children to defend them, and not so much does he mind death as that he should not see his children in the hands of the hunters, penned in the rude ^b wild-beast den. And ere now a shepherd, approaching the kennel where a bitch nursed her new-born whelps, ^c even if he were acquainted with her before, has drawn back in terror at her yelping wrath ; so fiercely she guards her young and has no regard for any but is fearful of approach for all. How, too, around calves when they are dragged away do their grieving mothers make lament, not unlike the mourning of women, causing the very herdsmen to share their pain. Yea and a man hears at morn the shrill plaint for her children of Gier ^d or many-noted Nightingale, or in the spring in their young, while the τρυγών and the βάτος among the chances on the Swallows wailing for their young, which cruel men or snakes have harried from the nest. Among fishes again the Dolphin is first in love for its children, but others likewise care for their young.

Here is the marvel of the sea-roaming Dog-fish.^a Her new-born brood keep her company and their mother is their shield ; but when they are affrighted by any of the infinite terrors of the sea, then she receives her children within her loins by the same entry,^b the same path, by which they glided forth when they were born. And this labour, despite her pain, she endures gladly, taking her children back within her body and putting them forth again when they have recovered from their fear.

A like defence also does the Angel-shark ^c furnish for her young ; but it is not into her womb that her children enter, as with the Dog-fish, but on either side below her fins she has slits, like the jaws of other fishes, wherewith she covers the terror of her frightened children.

Others again protect their children by taking them into the mouth as it were into a house or nest ; as, for example, the Glaucus ^d which loves its children beyond all other fishes that are oviparous. For it both remains sitting by until the young come forth from the eggs and always swims beside them ; and when it sees them afraid of a strange fish it opens its gape and takes them into its mouth until the terror has withdrawn, and then again ejects them from its throat.

Rays (τῶν πλατέων) do not διὰ τὴν τραχύτητα τῆς κέρκου, as neither does the βάτραχος, διὰ τὸ μέγεθος τῆς κεφαλῆς καὶ τὰς ἀκάνθας (cf. De gen. 754 a 29). Even the Dolphin and the Porpoise εἰσδέχονται τὰ τέκνα μικρὰ δυτα A. 566 b 17.

Than the Tunny I deem there is no fish that dwells in the brine more lawless or which exceeds it in wickedness of heart ; for when she has laid her eggs and escaped from the grievous travail of birth, the very mother that bare them devours all that she can overtake : pitiless mother who devours her own children while yet they are ignorant of flight and hath no compassion on her brood.

There are also those which are not produced by bridal or birth—races self-created and self-made : even all the Oysters,^a which are produced by the slime itself. Of these there is no female sex nor, in turn, are there any males, but all are of one nature and alike.

So also the weak race of the feeble Fry ^b are born of no blood and of no parents. For when from the clouds the wisdom of Zeus draws rain, fierce and incontinent, upon the deep, straightway all the sea, confounded by the eddying winds, hisses and foams and swells up and, by what manner of mating is beyond ken or guess, the Fry in shoals are born and bred and come to light, numberless and feeble, a hoary brood ; and from the manner of their birth they are nicknamed the Daughters of the Foam.^a And others of the Fry spring from the alluvial slime ; for when in the eddies and tides of the sea a medley mass of scum is washed up by the driving wind, then all the slimy silt comes together and when calm is spread abroad, straightway the sand and the infinite refuse of the sea ferment and therefrom spring the Fry innumerable like worms. There is not surely any other race more feeble than the poor Fry ; for all fishes they are a goodly feast, but themselves they lick each the body of the other : that is their food and livelihood. And when in their shoals they beset the sea, seeking haply a shady rock or covert of the sea and watery shelter, then all the grey deep shows white. As when the swift might of Zephyrus from the West shadows with snow-flakes a spacious garden and nothing of the dark earth appears to the eye, but all is white and covered with snow on snow ; even so in that season, full to overflowing with the infinite shoals of Fry, white shines the garden of Poseidon.

^a ποδὸς ἵχνος is so common a periphrasis for πούς (Eur. I. in T. 752 etc.), and αἱρω (Eur. Tr. 342 μὴ κοῦφον αἱρη βῆμ' ἐς Ἀργείων στρατόν) so naturally refers to "lifting" the foot, that this seems the safer rendering. HALIEUTICA, OR FISHING

THUS do fishes range and feed, thus roam the tribes of the sea ; in such mating, in such breeding they delight. All these things, I ween, someone of the immortals hath showed to men. For what can mortals accomplish without the gods ? Nay, not even so much as lift a foot from the ground ^a or open the bright orbs of the eyes. The gods themselves rule and direct everything, being far, yet very near. And doom unshakable constrains men to obey, and there is no strength nor might whereby one may haughtily wrench ^b with stubborn jaws and escape that doom, as a colt that spurns the bit. But evermore the gods who are above all turn the reins all ways even as they will, and he who is wise obeys before he is driven by the cruel lash unwillingly. The gods also have given to men cunning arts and have put in them all wisdom. Other god is namesake of other craft, even that whereof he hath got the honourable keeping. Deo ^c hath the privilege of yoking oxen and ploughing the fields and reaping the fruitful harvest of wheat. Carpentry of wood and building of houses and weaving of cloth with the goodly wool of sheep—these hath Pallas taught to men. The gifts of Ares are swords and brazen tunics to array the limbs and helmets and spears and whatsoever things Enyo ^a delights in. The gifts of the Muses and Apollo are songs. Hermes hath bestowed eloquence ^b and doughty feats of strength.^c Hephaestus hath in his charge the sweaty toil of the hammer. These devices also of the sea and the business of fishing and the power to mark the multitude of fishes that travel in the water—these hath some god given to men ; even he who also first filled the rent bowels of earth with the gathered rivers and poured forth the bitter sea and wreathed it as a garland, confining it about with crags and beaches ; whether one should more fitly call him wide-ruling Poseidon or ancient Nereus or Phorcys, or other god that rules the sea. But may all the gods that keep Olympus, and they that dwell in the sea, or on the bounteous earth, or in the air, have a gracious heart toward thee, O blessed wielder of the sceptre, and toward thy glorious offspring and to all thy people and to our song.

Among fishes neither justice ^d is of any account nor is there any mercy nor love ; for all the fish that swim are bitter foes to one another. The stronger ^e ever devours the weaker ; this against that swims fraught with doom and one for another furnishes food. Some^a overpower the weaker by force of jaws and strength ; others have venomous mouth ; others have spines wherewith to defend them with deadly blows—bitter, sharp points of fiery wrath. And those to whom God hath not given strength, and who have no sharp sting springing from the body, to these he hath given a weapon of the mind, even crafty counsel of many devices ; these by guile oftentimes destroy a strong and mightier fish.

Thus the Cramp-fish^b of tender flesh is endowed with a specific of valour, self-taught in its own limbs. For soft of body and altogether weak and sluggish it is weighed down with slowness,^c and you could not say you see it swimming ; hard to mark is its path as it crawls and creeps through the grey water. But in its loins it hath a piece of craft, its strength in weakness : even two rays planted in its sides, one on either hand. If one approach and touch these, straightway it quenches the strength of his body and his blood is frozen within him and his limbs can no longer carry him but he quietly pines away and his strength is drained by stupid torpor. Knowing well^d what a gift it hath received from God, the Cramp-fish lays itself supine among the sands and so remains, lying unmoving as a corpse. But any fish that touches its loins is paralysed and falls even so into the deep sleep of weakness, fettered by helplessness. And the Cramp-fish, albeit not swift, speedily leaps up in joy and devours the living fish as if it were dead. Many times also when it meets with fishes swimming in the gulf of the sea, it quenches with its touch their swift career for all their haste and checks them in mid course. And they stay, blasted and helpless, thinking not, poor wretches, either of going on or of flight. But the Cramp-fish stays by and devours them, while they make no defence nor are conscious of their fate. Even as in the darkling phantoms of a dream,^a when a man is terrified and fain to flee, his heart leaps, but, struggle as he may, a steadfast bond as it were weighs down his eager knees : even such a fetter doth the Cramp-fish devise for fishes.

The Fishing-frog^b again is likewise a sluggish and ranae ; Cicero N.D. ii. 125 Ranae autem marinae dicuntur obruere sese arena solere et moveri prope aquam : ad quas quasi ad escam pisces cum accesserint confici a ranis atque consumi. "The first dorsal ray, inserted on the snout, is very long, movable in every direction, and terminates in a dermal flap, which is supposed to be used by the 'Angler' as a bait, attracting other fishes, which are soon ingulfed in the enormous gape" C.N.H. vii. p. 718 ; Aristotle, classifying it as a Selachian and holding all Selachians to be viviparous, notes the βάτραχος as the one exception (A. 505 b 3 τὰ δὲ σελάχη πάντα ἵψοικα πλὴν βατράχου : cf. 564 b 18, etc., De gen. 749 a 23). In De gen. 754 a 26 he gives as the reason for this the immense size of its head—πολλαπλασίαν τοῦ λοιποῦ σώματος καὶ ταύτην ἀκανθώδη καὶ σφέδρα τραχεῖαν. διόπερ οὐδὲ ὑστερον εἰσδέχεται τοὺς νεοττοὺς οὐδὲ ἐξ ἀρχῆς ἵψοικει. "Il y avait une bien meilleure réponse à faire, c'est que la baudroie n'est pas un cartilagineux et d'ailleurs il s'en faut beaucoup que les autres cartilagineux soient tous vivipares ; enfin, ni les poissons cartilagineux ni les autres ne font rentrer leurs petits dans leur corps" Cuvier, xii. p. 363.

soft fish and most hideous to behold, with mouth that opens exceeding wide. But for him also craft devises food for his belly. Wrapt himself in the slimy mud he lies motionless, while he extends aloft a little bit of flesh which grows from the bottom of his jaw below, fine and bright, and it has an evil breath. This he waves incessantly, a snare for lesser fishes which, seeing it, are fain to seize it. But the Fishing-frog quietly draws it again gently quivering within his mouth, and the fishes follow, not suspecting any hidden guile until, ere they know it, they are caught within the wide jaws of the Fishing-frog. As when a man, devising a snare for lightsome birds, sprinkles some grains of wheat before the gates of guile while others he puts inside, and props up the trap ; the keen desire of food draws the eager birds and they pass within and no more is return or escape prepared for them, but they win an evil end to their banquet ; even so the weak Fishing-frog deceives and attracts the fishes and they perceive not that they are hastening their own destruction. A like device, I have heard, the cunning Fox ^a contrives. When she sees a dense flight of birds, she lies down on her side and stretches out her swift limbs and closes her eyes and shuts fast her mouth. Seeing her you would say that she was deep asleep or even lying quite dead : so breathless she lies stretched out, contriving guile. The birds, beholding, rush straightway upon her in a crowd and tear her fur with their feet, as if in mockery. But when they come nigh her teeth, then she opens the doors of guile and suddenly seizes them, and with wide gape cunningly catches her prey, even all that she takes at a swoop.

Yea, the crafty Cuttle-fish^a also has found a cunning manner of hunting. From her head^b grow long slender branches,^c like locks of hair, wherewith as with lines she draws and captures fish, prone in the sand and coiled beneath her shell.^d With those locks, too, when the waves rage in wintry weather, she clings to the rocks even as a ship fastens her cables to the rocks upon the shore.

Prawns^e are small to look at and small too is the strength of their limbs, yet by their craft they destroy a valiant fish, even the Basse^f named^g for its gluttony. For the Basse are eager and keen to seize the Prawns; and these have no strength either to flee or to fight, yet as they are destroyed they destroy and slay their slayers. When the gaping^h Basse have caught them within their teeth, they leap oftentimes and fix in the midst of the palate of the Basse the sharp horn ^a which springs from the top of their heads. The Basse, glutted with the prey which he loves, heeds not the prick. But it spreads and creeps apace, until, worn out with pain, doom overtakes him ; and too late he knows that he is stricken by the spear of the dead.^b

There is a fish which is at home in the mud, even the ravenous Ox-ray,^c broadest among all fishes ; for indeed his breadth is often eleven cubits or twelve. But in might he is a weakling, and his body is devoid of strength and soft. The teeth within his mouth are inconspicuous, small and not strong. By might he could not overpower anything, but by craft he ensnares and overcomes even cunning men. For he greatly delights to banquet upon man and human flesh above all is to him pleasing and a welcome food. When he beholds anyone of those men who have their business in the deep waters of the brine descending to the nether depths, he rises lightly above his head and swims steadfastly, like the roof of a house, stretched about him inexorably. Where the wretched man goes, he goes, and when the man halts, he stands over him like a lid. As a boy sets a guileful doom for greedy mice ; and the mouse, not dreaming of the ambush of the trap, is driven within by the desire of the belly ;

and swiftly the hollow vessel clasps too above him and, for all his endeavour, he can no more escape from the strong cover, till the boy seizes and kills him, mocking the while his prey ; even so over the man's head the deadly fish extends, preventing him from rising to the surface, until breath leaves him and he gasps out his life amid the waves ; where the Ox-ray of evil name sets about him and feasts upon him, having by his wiles captured a difficult prey.

And one who observes a Crab among the mossy ledges will praise and admire him for his cunning art. For to him also hath Heaven given wisdom to feed on Oysters, a sweet and unlaborious food. The Oysters open the bars of their doors and lick the mud, and, in their desire for water, sit wide open in the arms of the rocks. The Crab ^a on the other hand takes a pebble from the beach and, moving sideways, carries it clutched in his sharp claws. Stealthily he draws near and puts the stone in the middle of the Oyster. Then he sits by and makes a pleasant feast. And the Oyster, though fain, is unable to shut his two valves, but gapes perforce until he dies and gluts his captor.

A like craft is practised also by the reptile Star-

C.N.H. l.c. “Sometimes in a single night a whole bed of oysters will be destroyed by an invasion of Star-fish,” where different accounts of the procedure of Star-fish are given:
1. The Star-fish wraps its turned-out stomach round the Oyster, enclosing the mouth of the shell so that the Oyster sickens, the hinge-spring relaxes its hold, and the shell opening permits the Star-fish to suck the gelatinous contents. 2. The Star-fish seizes the Oyster with two of his fingers, while with the other three he files away the edge fishes ^a of the sea ; for these too have a device against Oysters. Howbeit they bring no stone as comrade nor ally, but insert in the middle of the open Oyster a rough limb. Thus the Oysters are overcome, while the Starfish feed.

A shell again keeps the plains of the deep, wherein dwells a fish called Pinna.^b The Pinna herself is weak and can of herself devise nothing nor do aught, but in one house and one shelter with her dwells a Crab which feeds and guards her ; wherefore it is called the Pinna-guard. Now when a fish comes within the shell, the Crab seizes the unheeding Pinna and wounds her with crafty bite. Then in her pain she claps her shells together and so contrives to catch within a prey for herself and her companion, and of the flat valve until he can introduce an arm. 3. The Star-fish suffocates the Oyster by applying two of its fingers so closely to the edge of the valves that the Oyster is unable to open them ; after a while the vital powers relax and the shell gapes. 4. The Star-fish pours a secretion from its mouth, which paralyses the hinge-muscle and causes the shell to open. Cf. Plin. ix. 183 ; Plut. Mor. 978 β.

they take a common meal together.^a Thus even among the swimming tribes that travel in the water some are crafty and some are stupid, as among us men, and not all have a right understanding.

Mark now a fish that exceeds all in stupidity, even the Day-sleeper,^b lazy beyond all that the sea breeds. The eyes in his head are turned upward and the ravenous mouth between his eyes. Always he lies all day stretched in the sands asleep and only at night does he awake and wander abroad ; wherefore he is also called the Bat. But an evil doom is his for his limitless appetite. For he knows no satiety of food nor any measure, but in his shameless belly he nurses gluttony, rabid and endless, nor would he cease from feeding if food were at hand, till his belly itself burst utterly in the midst and himself fall flat upon his back or some other fish kill him, gorged with his latest meal. This sign I tell you of his ravenous gluttony. If a man capture him and tempt his prey by offering him food with his hand, he will take it until the food shall be heaped up even^a unto the most gluttonous jaws of him. Hear, ye generations of men, what manner of issue there is to gluttonous folly, what pain follows upon excessive eating. Let a man therefore drive far from heart and hand idleness that delights in evil pleasure, and observe measure in eating nor delight in luxurious tables. For many such there be among men who hold the reins loose and allow all rope to their belly. But let a man behold and avoid the end of the Day-sleeper.

Wit and cunning belong also to the prickly Urchins,^b which know^c when the violence of the wind and the fierce storms are rising, and lift each of them upon their backs a stone of such weight as they can easily carry on their spines, that thus weighted they may withstand the driving of the wave. For that is what they most dread—lest the swelling wave roll them on the shore.

Poulpes, which make themselves like ^a in appearance to the rocks, even whatsoever rock they embrace and entwine with their tentacles. By their deceits they easily mislead and escape fishers alike and stronger fishes. When a weaker fish meets them near at hand, straightway they leap forth from their stony form and appear as veritable Poulpes and fishes, and by their craft contrive food and escape destruction. But in winter, they say, the Poulpes never travel over the waters of the sea ; for they fear the fierce storms. But sitting in their hollow chambers they cower, and devour their own feet ^b as if they were alien flesh. These feet, when they have glutted their owners, grow again : this gift, I ween, Poseidon has given them. Such a device is used also by the fierce and gluttonous Bears.^c For they, shunning winter's threat, retreat into the rocky covert of their lair, where they lick their own feet, a fasting feast, animals also escape detection by a very extraordinary chameleon-like power of changing their colour. They appear to vary their tints according to the nature of the ground over which they pass : when in deep water their general shade was brownish-purple, but when placed on the land, or in shallow water, this dark tint changed into one of a yellowish-green," etc.

seeking an unsubstantial food, and come not forth, until the mild spring be in its prime.

Above all other the dashing Crayfish^a and the Muraena^b and the Poulpes have a bitter feud with each other and destroy one another with mutual slaughter. Always there is fishy war and strife between them, and one fills his maw with the other. The raging Muraena comes forth^c from her sea-washed rock and speeds through the waves of the deep in quest of food. Anon it descries a Poulpe crawling on the edge of the shore and rushes gladly on a welcome prey. The Poulpe is not unaware that the Muraena is at hand. First in terror he turns to flee, but he has no means to escape the Muraena, he crawling while she swims and rushes incontinently. Speedily she catches the Poulpe and fixes her deadly teeth in him. The Poulpe, on the other hand, albeit unwilling, fights under deadly compulsion and twines around her limbs, contriving all manner of twists, now this, now that, with his crooked whips, if haply, embracing her in his nooses, he may stay her onset. But for his evil plight there is no cure nor escape. When the Poulpe enfolds her, the nimble Muraena with her slippery limbs easily escapes through his embrace like water. But the Poulpe twines now round her spotted back, now round her neck, now round her very tail, and anon rushes into the gates of her mouth and the recesses of her jaws. Even as two men skilled in valiant wrestling long time display their might against each other ; already from the limbs of both pours the sweat warm and abundant and the varied wiles of their art are all abroad and their hands wave about their bodies: even so the suckers of the Poulpe, at random plied, are all abroad, and labour in vain wrestling. But the Muraena with sharp assault of teeth rends the Poulpe; some of his limbs her belly receives, while other parts the sharp teeth still grind in her jaws, others are still quivering and twisting, half consumed, struggling still and fain to escape. As when in the woods the Stag ^a of heavy horns, seeking out the path of serpents, discovers the track by scent and comes to the lair and hales the reptile out and devours it amain, while the serpent twines about knees and neck and breast, and some of its limbs lie half-eaten, much yet in the Stag's jaws the teeth devour: even so the coiling limbs of the hapless Poulpe writhe, nor does his device of stony craft save him. For even if perchance in his endeavours to escape he twine about a rock and clothe him in a colour like to it, yet he escapes not the wit of the Muraena, but she alone remarks him and his cunning is in vain. Then thou wouldest pity him for his unseemly doom, as he crouches on the rocks, while she stands by, as it were mocking him. Thou wouldest say the cruel Muraena spoke and mocked him thus. And straightway she fixes in him the curved hedge of her teeth and devours him, pulling him all trembling from the rock. But he, even while he is rent, does not leave the rock nor let go. Coiling he clings to it till only his suckers remain fast. As when a city is sacked by the hands of the foemen, and children and women are haled away as the prize of the spear, a man drags away a boy who clings to the neck and arms of his mother; the boy relaxes not his arms that are twined about her neck, nor does the wailing mother let him go, but is dragged with him herself; even so the poor body of the Poulpe, as he is dragged away, clings to the wet rock and lets not go.

The Crayfish^a again destroys the Muraena,^b savage though she be, overcome by her valour fatal to herself. He stands near the rock in which dwells the nimble Muraena and extends his two feelers and, breathing hostile breath, challenges the Muraena to battle: even as a chieftain, the champion of an army, who, trusting in the prowess of his hands and his skill in war, arrays in arms his strong body and brandishing his sharp spears challenges any foeman who will to meet him, and presently provokes another chieftain. Even so the Crayfish whets the spirit of the Muraena, and no laggard for battle is the dusky fish, but rushing from her lair with arched neck and quivering with wrath she goes to meet him. Yet for all her terrible rage she hurts not the prickly Crayfish; vainly and idly she fixes in him her jaw and rages with her hard teeth, which in her jaws rebound as from a hard rock and grow weary and

Greatly her fierce heart burns and is stirred, until the Crayfish rushes on her with his long claws and seizes her by the tendon in the midst of her throat, and clings and holds her firm as with brazen tongs, and lets her not go though eager to escape. She, distressed by his violence and vexed by pain, wheels every way her crooked body, and speedily she throws herself about the prickly back of the Crayfish and enfolds him and impales herself on the spine and sharp points of his shell, and, full of many wounds, perishes self-destroyed, dead by her own folly. As when a man skilled in the work of slaying wild beasts,^a when the people are gathered in the house-encircled market-place,^b awaits the Leopard^c maddened by the cracking of the whip and with long-edged spear stands athwart her path ; she, though she beholds the edge of sharp iron, mantles in swelling fury and receives in her throat, as it were in a spear-stand, the brazen lance ; even so wrath slays the unhappy Muraena in her folly, overcome by self-dealt wounds. Such strife, I ween, upon the dry land a Serpent and a prickly Hedgehog wage, when they meet in the woods ; for enmity is their lot also. The Hedgehog, seeing in front of him the deadly reptile, fences himself with his close-set bristling spines and rolls himself into a ball, protecting his limbs under his fence within which he crawls. The Serpent, rushing upon him, first assails him with his venomous

Milton, Par. Lost, vi. 331 of Satan's wound: "from the gash | A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd | Sanguine, such as celestial Spirits may bleed;" Byron, Vision of Judgement, 25 of St. Peter, "Of course his jaws, but his labour is all in vain. For despite his eagerness he cannot reach the flesh within with his devouring teeth ; so rough a pile surrounds the Hedgehog ; who, like a round boulder, wheels his shifty limbs, rolling turn on turn, and falls upon the coils of the Serpent and wounds him with the sharp arrows of his bristles ; and here and there flows the bloody ichor^a and many wounds torment the Serpent. Then the clammy Snake girds the Hedgehog all about with his circling coil and in the embrace of his grievous bonds holds him and bites and puts therein the strength of anger. Then swiftly all the sharp-bristling spines of the Hedgehog glide into him ; yet, impaled upon the prickles, he abates not his effort though fettered against his will, but remains fast as if held by strong dowels, until he dies ; and often by his pressure he destroys the beast as well, and they become doom and bane to one another. But often, too, the dread Hedgehog gets away and escapes, slipping from the reptile and his darksome fetter, bearing still upon his spines the flesh of the dead Serpent. In like fashion also the Muraena perishes by a foolish doom, to the Crayfish an eager and welcome feast.

The Crayfish again, prickly though he be and swift, is devoured by the Poulpe,^b albeit he is weaker and sluggish of motion. For when the Poulpe remarks him under the rocks sitting all motionless, stealthily perspiration was but ichor | Or some such other spiritual liquor."

* παλίρροος (Eur. I. in T. 1397, Aesch. Ag. 191), παλιρροῖα (Soph. fr. 716, Herod. ii. 23, Diodor. i. 32) are constantly used of the ebb and flow of the tide and hence of any ebb and flow, e.g. of fortune (παλιρροῖα τῆς τύχης Diodor. xviii. 59). Especially natural is the application to air or breath (Tryphiod. 76 παλιρροον ἀσθμα: cf. Theophrast. De vent. 10, A. De spir. 482 b 3, Probl. 940 b 25). As to the breathing of Fishes, Aristotle classes them among τὰ μὴ ἀναπνέοντα (De sens. 444 b 7); but the contrary opinion is maintained by Pliny, ix. 16 ff. "They . . . suppose likewise that no fishes having guils do draw in and deliver their wind againe too and fro . . . Among others I see that Aristotle was of that mind . . . For mine owne part . . . I professe that I

he springs upon his back and casts his various bonds about him, oppressing him with the long chains of his strong feet and with the ends of his tentacles withal he constricts and strangles the warm channel in the midst of his mouth and suffers not his airy breath to pass either out or in (for fishes too draw the tide of air),^a but holds him in his embrace. And the Crayfish now swims, now halts, and again struggles, and anon dashes against the jutting crags. But the Poulpe relaxes not the contest of might, until life and strength forsake the other in death. Then when the Crayfish falls prone, the Poulpe sits by him on the sands and feasts, even as a child draws with his lips the sweet milk from the breast of his nurse ; even so the Poulpe laps the flesh of the Crayfish, sucking and drawing it forth from its prickly vessel, and fills his belly with sweet food. Even as a day-sleeping ^b man, with predatory craft devising dark counsels, never honouring the majesty of justice, skulks at evening in the narrow streets and lies in wait for one passing by after a banquet ; the banqueter, heavy with wine, goes forward, singing drunkenly, bawling no very sober melody ; and the other

These above all creatures of the sea are hostile and unfriendly and alone among the fishes of varied tribe are avengers and slayers one of the other.

Others of the fishes are venomous^a and an ugly venom is bred in their mouths and creeps hateful into their bite. Such is the Scolopendra,^b an ominous reptile of the brine, like in form to the reptile of the land, but deadlier in its hurt. For if one approach and touch it, straightway itch makes a hot redness on his flesh and a weal runs over him as from the grass which, from the pains which it causes, men call the nettle. Most hateful of all is the Scolopendra for fishermen to encounter; for if it touch the bait, not a fish will come near that hook; with such a hateful venom does the Scolopendra infect it.

Rainbow-wrasses^a; them do men who explore the depths of the sea chiefly abhor—divers and toilsome sponge-cutters.^b For when they behold the searcher of the sea hastening to the depths for his labour under the water, in tens of thousands they spring from the rocks and rush around the man and throng in swarms about him and stay him in his course as he labours, on this side and on that stinging him with relentless mouths. He is wearied by his conflict with the water and the hateful Wrasses. With hands and hastening feet he does all he can to ward off and drive away the watery host. But they pursue him stubbornly, like unto flies, the grievous hosts of harvest, which on every side fly about the reapers at their work when they toil in autumn; and the reapers sweat at once with their toil and the intemperate shafts of the air and they are vexed exceedingly by the flies; but these abate nothing of their shamelessness until they die or have tasted the reaper's dusky blood. Even such lust have these fishes also for the blood of men.

^b M.G. κωβιός (γωβιός) is generic for the various species of Goby, of which Gobius niger is the commonest in Greek waters (Apost. p. 10). A. 598 a 11, 610 b 4, etc. The identification rests mainly on the use of κωβιός in M.G. Cuvier, xii. 4 ff., argues against the identification on two grounds: 1. A. 508 b 15 οἱ δ' ἵχθύες (ἀποφνάδας ἔχουσιν, have caeca) ἀνωθεν περὶ τὴν κοιλαν, καὶ ἔνιοι πολλάς, οἷον κωβιός, γαλεός. . . . Now the Goby has no caeca. But the reading is suspect as the γαλεός also is without caeca. 2. Whereas Oppian and Aelian speak of the formidable spines of the κωβιός, “the simple rays of the Gobies are flexible and cannot wound.” Cuvier, basing on Athen. 309 c, where we read that the κωβιός was also called κῶθος, or κώθων, identifies the κωβιός with Cottus gobio L., the Bull-head or Miller’s Thumb. It is possible that κωβιός was also applied to the fresh-water Gudgeon, Gobio fluviatilis, which may be the fish referred to Athen. 309 e ποταμίων δὲ κωβιῶν μνημονεύει Δωρίων ἐν τῷ περὶ ἵχθύων, although the Goby also enters rivers and lakes, A. 601 b 21 γίνονται δὲ καὶ οἱ κωβιοὶ πλοες ἐν τοῖς ποταμοῖς, as in Latin writers certainly gobio or gobius sometimes means Goby, Plin. xxxii. 146 cobio (i.e. gobio) among “peculiares maris,” sometimes Gudgeon, Auson. Mosell. 131 Tu quoque flumineas inter memorande cohortes, Gobio, non geminis maior sine pollice palmis, Praepinguis (an epithet which suggests that even A. 601 b 21 may refer to the Gudgeon).

he wounds, nor the Cuttle-fish,^a but in them also is bred an ichor scanty but noxious. Among fishes armed with sharp stings are the Goby ^b which rejoices in the sands and the Scorpion ^c which rejoices in the rocks, and the swift Swallows and the Weevers ^d and those Dog-fish ^e which are named from their grievous spines — all discharging poison with their deadly pricks.

Il est généralement admis que les arêtes de ces poissons sont vénéneuses. Aussi les pêcheurs les saisissent-ils avec la plus grande précaution; on les apporte rarement intacts au marché; le plus souvent, pour éviter tout danger, on les mutile aussitôt après les avoir capturés” (Apost. p. 9). Drayton, Polyolbion xxv. 167 The Weaver, which although his prickles venom bee, By Fishers cut away which Buyers seldom see. Cf. Day i. 78 ff. It is generally thought that the correct spelling of the English name is Weever, O.F. vivre, Lat. vipera, cf. the heraldic Wyvern, though the Lat. araneus=spider suggests some doubt, Weaver (Wyver) being in some places, e.g. Banffshire, in familiar use as a name for a species of spider.

For the Sting-ray ^a and the Swordfish ^b God has put in their bodies most powerful gifts, equipping each with a weapon of exceeding might. Above the jaw of the Swordfish he has set a natural sword, upright and sharp, no sabre of iron but a mighty sword with the strength of adamant. When he puts his weight behind his terrible spear not even the hardest rock may endure the wound ; so fierce and fiery is the onset.

In the Sting-ray there springs from below the tail a fierce sting, at once grievous in its power and deadly with its venom. Neither the Sword-fishes nor the Sting-rays will taste any food with their jaws, until they have first wounded with their deadly jaws whatever prey is at hand whether it be alive or lifeless. But when the breath of life forsakes the Sword-fish, his mighty sword straightway perishes with him and his weapon is quenched with its master and there is left a bone of no account, a great sword only to behold and thou couldst do nothing with it if thou wouldest. But than the wound of the Sting-ray there is no more evil hurt, neither in the warlike weapons which the hands of the smith contrive nor in the deadly drugs which Persian pharmacists have devised upon their winged arrows. While the Sting-ray lives, a terrible and fiery weapon attends it, such, I ween, as a man trembles to hear of, and it lives when the Sting-ray itself has perished and preserves its unwearied strength unchanged ; and not only on the living creatures which it strikes does it belch mysterious bane but it hurts even tree and rock and wherever it comes nigh. For if one take a lusty tree that flourishes in its season, with goodly foliage and fruitful crop, and wound it in the roots below with that relentless stroke, then, smitten by an evil bane, it ceases to put forth leaves and first droops as if by disease and its beauty fades away ; and at no distant date thou shalt behold the tree withered and worthless and its greenery gone.

That sting it was which his mother Circe,^a skilled in many drugs, gave of old to Telegonus for his long hilted spear, that he might array for his foes death from the sea. And he beached his ship on the island that pastured goats ; and he knew not that he was harrying the flocks of his own father, and on his aged sire who came to the rescue, even on him whom he was seeking, he brought an evil fate. There the cunning Odysseus, who had passed through countless woes of the sea in his laborious adventures, the grievous Sting-ray slew with one blow.

turn away or escape : a fierce gadfly ^a which infests their fins and which, when the burning Dog-star is newly risen, fixes in them the swift might of its bitter sting, and with sharp assault stirs them to grievous madness, making them drunk with pain. With the lash of frenzy it drives them to dance against their will ; maddened by the cruel blow they rush and now here, now there ride over the waves, possessed by pain unending. Often also they leap into well-beaked ships, driven by the stress of their distemper ; and often they leap forth from the sea and rush writhing upon the land, and exchange their weary agonies for death ; so dire pain is heavy upon them and abates not. Yea, for oxen ^b also, when the cruel gadfly attacks them and plunges its arrow in their tender flanks, have no more regard for the herdsmen nor for the pasture nor for the herd, but leaving the grass and all the folds they rush, whetted by frenzy ; no river nor untrodden sea nor rugged ravine nor pathless rock stays the course of the bulls, when the gadfly hot and sharp impels, urging them with keen pains. Everywhere there is bellowing, everywhere range their bounding hoofs : such bitter tempest drives. This pain the fishes suffer even as do the cattle.

sea, pluming themselves eminently on their valiance and beauty and their swift speed in the water ; for like an arrow they fly through the sea, and fiery and keen is the light which they flash from their eyes, and they desery, I ween, any fish that cowers in a cleft or wraps itself beneath the sands. Even as the Eagles ^a are lords among the lightsome birds or Lions amid ravenous wild beasts, as Serpents are most excellent among reptiles, so are Dolphins leaders among fishes. Them as they come no fish dares to approach nor any to look them in the face, but they tremble from afar at the dread leaps and snorting breath of the lord of fishes. When the Dolphins set out in quest of food, they huddle ^b before them all the infinite flocks of the sea together, driving them in utter rout ; they fill with terror every path of the sea, and shady covert and low ravine, and the havens and the bays of the shore are straitened with fishes huddling from every side ; and the Dolphin devours whichsoever he will, choosing the best of the infinite fishes at hand.

But, notwithstanding, even the Dolphins have foes who meet their encounter, the fish called Amia,^c which care not for the Dolphin but alone fight them face to face. These have a weaker body than the

Tunny and are clothed in feeble flesh, but in their ravenous mouth bristles sharp a dense array of teeth ; wherefore also they have great courage and do not cower before the mighty lord of fishes. For when they see one that has wandered away alone from the rest of the herd of Dolphins, then from this quarter and from that, as a great army at command, they gather in a body together and set forth to battle dauntlessly, like shielded warriors against the tower of the foe. And the bearded Dolphin, when the crowd meets him, at first recks not of them but rushes among them, seizing and rending now one and now another, finding a banquet after his heart. But when the ranks of war surround him on every side and encircle him with their great and dense array, then trouble at length enters his heart and he knows that sheer destruction is upon him, hemmed about as he is, alone among countless foes ; and the toil of battle appears. For furiously they fall in a body about the limbs of the Dolphin and fix in him the might of their teeth ; everywhere they bite him and cling to him relentlessly, many clutching his head, others his grey jaws, while yet others cleave to his very fins ; many in his flanks fix their deadly teeth, others seize the end of his tail, others his belly beneath, others feed upon his back above, others hang from his mane, others from his neck. And, full of manifold distress, he rushes over the sea and his frenzied heart within him is racked with agony and his spirit is afire with pain. Every way he leaps and turns, rushing blindly in the spasms of agony. Like a diver, now he runs over the deep waves like a whirlwind, now he plunges to the nether deeps ; and often he springs up and leaps above the foam of the sea, if haply the bold swarm of overweening fishes may let him go. But they, relentless, no wise abate their violence but cling to him all the same ; when he dives, they dive along with him ; when he leaps up again, they likewise spring forth from the sea in his train. You would say that the Shaker of the Earth had gotten a new and monstrous birth, half Dolphin and half Amia ; so grievous the bond of teeth wherewith he is bound. As when a cunning physician drains a swollen wound, within which is gathered much unwholesome blood, and he applies to the flesh of the sufferer the watery brood, the dark-hued reptiles of the marsh,^a to feast on his black blood ; and straightway they become arched and rounded and draw the filth and abate not until having drained the strong drink of blood they roll of themselves from the flesh and fall like drunken men ; even so the fury of the Amia abates not until they have devoured with the mouth the flesh which they once seized. But when they leave him and the Dolphin gets a breathing-space from toil, then shalt thou behold the rage of the angry lord of fishes and deadly doom appears for the Amia. They flee ; and he behind working havoc, like hurricane of evil noise, lays all waste, devouring them incontinently, and with ravening jaws reddens the sea with blood ; and he avenges the despite that he suffered. Even so in the woods, as hunters tell, the terrible Jackals ^a gather and busy themselves about a Stag ; they rush upon him and rend his flesh with their jaws and lap the warm gore of new-shed blood : the Stag bellowing in his bloody pain, full of deadly wounds, bounds now to this mountain-crag, now to that, but the ravenous beasts leave him not but always follow him close, and rend him alive and tear off his hide before he finds death, making a black and woeful banquet. But while the shameless Jackals pay no requital but laugh loud over the dead Stags, the bold Amia soon fight a less happy fight.

This other excellent deed of the Dolphins have I heard and admire. When fell disease and fatal draws nigh to them, they fail not to know it but are aware of the end of life. Then they flee the sea and the wide waters of the deep and come aground ^b on the shallow shores. And there they give up their breath and receive their doom upon the land ; that so perchance some mortal man may take pity on the holy messenger ^c of the Shaker of the Earth when he lies low, and cover him with mound of shingle, remembering his gentle friendship ; or haply the seething sea herself may hide his body in the sands ; nor any of the brood of the sea behold the corse of their lord, nor any foe do despite to his body even in death. Excellence and majesty attend them even when they perish, nor do they shame their glory even when they die.

^a In Aristotle κεστρεύς is sometimes generic for the Grey Mullets (Mugilidae), including κέφαλος: A. 534 b 14 ἀρχονται δὲ κύειν τῶν κεστρέων οἱ μὲν χελῶνες τοῦ Ποσειδεῶνος καὶ ὁ σάργος καὶ ὁ σμύξων καλούμενος καὶ ὁ κέφαλος; sometimes specific and contrasted with κέφαλος: A. 570 b 14 τίκτει δὲ πρώτον τῶν τοιούτων ἀθερίνη . . . κέφαλος δὲ ὑστατος . . . τίκτει δὲ καὶ κεστρεύς ἐν τοῖς πρώτοις. As a specific name κέφαλος is perhaps Mugil cephalus, M.G. κέφαλος, γομφόλι at Chalcis; στειράδια the males and μπάφες the females at Missolonghi: they spawn about the month of May, “de leurs œufs on fait la boutargue” (Apost. p. 20). κεστρεύς is perhaps M. capito, M.G. λαγιάδες at Chalcis, βελάνισες at Aitolico (Apost. l.c.). But whatever the original distinction, κέφαλος as a name seems to have usurped the place of κεστρεύς (Suid. s. κεστρεύς ὁ νῦν λεγόμενος κέφαλος) and in the Cyclades is now the generic name for all species of Grey Mullet (Erh. p. 89). The making of “boutargue” (Sp. botargo)—“produit excessivement recherché”—is described by Apostolides, p. 66: “La boutargue n'est autre chose que les ovaires des poissons, arrivés à l'état de maturité regorgeant déjà d'œufs prêts à être pondus et qui sont préparés par salaison. Une fois que le poisson sorti de l'eau, étant encore frais, on incise son ventre et on enlève

The Grey Mullet,^a I hear, among all the fishes of the sea nurses the gentlest and most righteous ^b mind. For only the kindly Grey Mullets harm neither one of their own kind nor any of another race. Nor do they touch with their lips fleshly food nor drink blood, but feed harmlessly, unstained of blood and doing no hurt, a holy race. Either upon the green seaweed they feed or on mere mud, and lick the bodies one of the other. Wherefore also among fishes they have honourable regard and none harms their young brood, as they do that of others, but refrain the violence of their ravenous teeth. Thus always and among all reverend Justice hath her privilege appointed and everywhere she wins her meed of honour. But all other fishes come fraught with destruction to one another ; wherefore also thou shalt never see fishes sleeping^a but evermore awake and sleepless are their eyes and wits, since always they dread the encounter of a stronger and slay the weaker. Only the tender Parrot-wrasse,^b as fishermen say, never falls into their nets in the darkness but doubtless sleeps^c by night in the hollow ocean caves.

Après, on les lave, on les place entre deux planches pour leur donner la forme sous laquelle on les voit habituellement dans le commerce, et on les laisse exposés au soleil pendant 4 à 8 jours. Une fois complètement secs, ils sont prêts à être vendus ; mais si on veut les conserver pendant longtemps, on les entoure d'une couche de cire en les plaçant pendant un instant dans la cire jaune fondu, d'où on les retire brusquement."

Yet it is no marvel that Justice should dwell apart from the sea. For not long since that first of goddesses had no throne even among men, but noisy riots and raging ruin of destroying Wars and Strife, giver of pain, nurse of tearful wars, consumed the unhappy race of the creatures of a day. Nor different at all from wild beasts were many among men ; but, more terrible than Lions, well-builded towers and halls and fragrant temples of the deathless gods they clothed with the blood of men and dark smoke of Hephaestus : until the Son of Cronus took pity on the afflicted race and bestowed upon you, the Sons of Aeneas, the earth for keeping. Yet even among the earlier kings of the Ausonians War still raged, arming Celts and proud Iberians and the great space^d of Libya and the lands of the Rhine^e and Ister and Euphrates. Wherefore need I mention those works of the spear ? For now, O Justice, nurse of cities, I know thee to share the hearth and home of men, ever since they hold sway together, mounted on their mighty throne—the

III

COME now, O Wielder of the Sceptre, mark thou the cunning devices of the fisher's art and his adventures in the hunting of his prey, and learn the law of the sea and take delight in my lay. For under thy sceptre rolls the sea and the tribes of the haunts of Poseidon, and for thee are all deeds done among men. For thee the gods have raised me up to be thy joy and thy minstrel among the Cilicians beside the shrine of Hermes. And, O Hermes,^a god of my fathers,^b most excellent of the children of the Aegis-bearer, subtlest mind ^c among the deathless gods, do thou enlighten and guide and lead, directing me to the goal of my song. The counsels of fishermen excellent in wit thou didst thyself, O Lord, first devise and didst reveal the sum of all manner of hunting, weaving doom for fishes. And thou didst deliver the art of the deep for keeping to Pan of Corycus,^d thy son,^e who, they say, was the saviour of Zeus—the saviour of Zeus but the slayer of Typhon.^a For he tricked terrible Typhon with promise of a banquet of fish and beguiled him to issue forth from his spacious pit and come to the shore of the sea, where the swift lightning and the rushing fiery thunderbolts laid him low ; and, blazing in the rain of fire, he beat his hundred heads upon the rocks whereon he was carded all about like wool. And even now the yellow banks by the sea are red with the blood of the Typhonian battle. O Hermes, glorious in counsel, thee especially do fishermen worship.^b Therefore invoking thee with the gods who aid their hunt I pursue the glorious song of their chase.

First of all the fisher should have body and limbs both swift and strong, neither over fat nor lacking in flesh. For often he must fight with mighty fish in landing them—which have exceeding strength so long as they circle and wheel in the arms of their mother sea. And lightly he must leap from a rock ; and, when the toil of the sea is at its height, he must swiftly travel a long way and dive into the deepest depths and abide amongst the waves and remain labouring at such works as men upon the sea toil at with enduring heart. should the fisher be, since many and various are the devices that fishes contrive, when they chance upon unthought-of snares. Daring also should he be and dauntless and temperate and he must not love satiety ^a of sleep but must be keen of sight, ^b wakeful of heart and open-eyed. He must bear well the wintry weather and the thirsty season of Sirius ^c; he must be fond of labour and must love the sea. So shall he be successful in his fishing and dear to Hermes.

In the autumn season fishing is best in the evening and when the morning-star rises. In winter the fisher should set out with the spreading rays of the sun. In bloomy spring the whole day is prosperous in all manner of fishing, what time all fishes are drawn to haunt the coasts near the land by the travail of birth and the thirst of desire. Look always for a wind that blows gentle and fair, lightly rolling a tranquil sea. For fishes fear and loathe violent winds and will not wheel over the sea, but with a temperate wind fishing is exceedingly favourable. All the fishes that swim the sea speed against wind and wave, since this is the easier way for them in their march toward the shores, and they do not suffer through being driven forcefully by the current. fisher puts to sea let him set his sail with the wind—Northward when the wet South Wind blows ; Southward when the North Wind drives the sea ; when the East Wind rises, towards the paths of the West Wind ; towards the East let the West Wind bear his vessel ; for so will infinite shoals meet him and his fishing will be blest with luck.

Fourfold ^a modes of hunting their prey in the sea have fishermen devised. Some delight in Hooks ^b ; and of these some fish with a well-twisted line ^c of horse-hair ^d fastened to long reeds, ^e others simply cast a flaxen cord ^f attached to their hands, another rejoices in leaded lines ^g or in lines with many hooks. ^h Others prefer to array Nets ⁱ ; and of these there are those called casting-nets, and those called draw-nets—drag-nets and round bag-nets and seines. Others they call cover-nets, and, with the seines, Il est totalement en crins de cheval tordus; il est employé surtout par les amateurs de pêche, dans leurs moments de loisir. On se rende sur de petites embarcations dans les endroits rocheux, on mouille le bateau et l'on commence la pêche en jetant la ligne, à laquelle le poids du plomb fait prendre, dans l'eau, une direction perpendiculaire; une fois qu'elle a touché le fond, on la soulève un peu et on la tient ainsi disposée pour la pêche.” ^b Introd. p. xxxix.

there are those called ground-nets and ball-nets and the crooked trawl : innumerable are the various sorts of such crafty-bosomed Nets. Others again have their minds set rather upon Weels ^a which bring joy to their masters while they sleep ^b at ease, and great gain attends on little toil. Others with the long pronged Trident ^c wound the fish from the land or from a ship as they will. The due measure and right ordering of all these they know certainly who contrive these things.

Fishes, it seems, not only against one another employ cunning wit and deceitful craft but often also they deceive even the wise fishermen themselves and escape from the might of hooks and from the belly of the trawl when already caught in them, and outrun the wits of men, outdoing them in craft, and become a grief to fishermen.

The Grey Mullet,^d when caught in the plaited arms of the net, is not ignorant of the encircling snare, but leaps up, eager to reach the surface of the water, hasting with all his might to spring straight up with nimble leap, and fails not of his wise purpose. For often he lightly overleaps ^e in his rush the utmost bounds of the corks ^a and escapes from doom. But if at his first upward rush he slips back again into the net, he makes no further effort and leaps no more in his grief but taught by trial, ceases from his endeavours. As when a man, long distressed by painful disease, at first, in his yearning and desire for life, obeys the physicians and does all things that they bid him ; but when the unescapable fates of death prevail, he cares no more for life but lies stretched out, giving over to death his exhausted limbs, beholding already at hand the final day of fate ; even so the Grey Mullet knows what manner of end is come upon him and lies prone, awaiting doom from his captor.

The Muraena,^b when they are caught in the net, circle about in the enclosure seeking for a wide mesh and through it making their way, after the manner of snakes, with slippery limbs they all escape.

The Basse ^c digs with its fins in the sand a trench large enough to admit its body and lays itself therein as in a bed. And the fishermen bring down to the shore a net but the Basse by simply lying in the mud gladly avoids them and escapes the net of destruction.

A like device is practised by the Mormyrus^a: when it perceives that it has fallen into the net, it hides in the sands.

The Basse,^b when smitten by the point of the bent hook, leaps on high and incessantly presses its head violently on the line itself, till the wound becomes wider and it escapes destruction.

The mighty Orcynus^c employ a similar device. For when they have seized the jaw of the guileful hook, swiftly they strain and rush to the nether depths, putting pressure on the hand of the fisher; and if they reach the bottom, straightway they beat their head against the ground and tear open the wound and spit out the barb.^d

But when giant fishes swallow the leaded hooks—such as the tribes of the Ox-ray^e and the Sea-sheep^f and the Skate^g or the sluggish race of the Hake^h—they will not yield to it but throwing their flat bodies in the sands they put all their weight upon the line and cause trouble to the fishermen, and often they get free from the hook and escape.

The swift Amia^a and the Fox-sharks,^b when they are hooked, straightway hasten upward to forestall the fisher and speedily bite through with their teeth the middle of the line or the extreme hairs. Therefore for them the fishermen forge a longer socket on the hook, as a protection against their teeth.

The Cramp-fish,^c moreover, forgets not its cunning in the pain of being struck, but straining in its agony it puts its flanks against the line, and straightway through the horse-hair and through the rod^d runs the pain which gives the fish its name^e and lights in the right hand of the fisher; and often the rod and the fishing-tackle escape from his palm. Such icy numbness straightway settles in his hand.

The Cuttle-fishes ^a again practise this craft.^b They have seated in their heads a dark muddy fluid blacker than pitch, a mysterious drug causing a watery cloud, which is their natural defence against destruction. When fear seizes them, immediately they discharge the dusky drops thereof and the cloudy fluid stains and obscures all around the paths of the sea and ruins all the view ; and they straightway through the turbid waters easily escape man or haply mightier fish.

A like craft is practised also by the air-travelling ^c tribes of the Calamary.^d Only their fluid is not black but reddish,^e but the device which they employ is altogether similar.

Such are the cunning devices ^f of fishes ; yet notwithstanding they perish by the subtle wiles of fishermen. Those which run in the sheer depths of the sea the fishers capture easily, since they possess no subtle craft. For ere now one has caught and landed a deep-sea fish with onions^g or with bare hooks. Those on the other hand which range near the sea-girding land have sharper wits ; yet even of these other fish employ other breeds, the weaker as bait for the stronger ; since verily all fishes are welcome food to one another and glutinous destruction. So true it is that naught is deadlier than hunger and the grievous belly,^a which bears harsh sway among men and is a stern mistress to dwell with : who never forgets her tribute and who misleads the wits of many and casts them into ruin and binds them fast to shame. The belly bears sway over wild beasts and over reptiles and over the flocks of the air, but it has its greatest power among fishes ; for them evermore the belly proves their doom.

Hear first the cunning mode of taking the Anthias ^b which is practised by the inhabitants of our glorious fatherland ^c above the promontory of Sarpedon,^d those who dwell in the city of Hermes,^e the town of Corycus,^f famous for ships, and in sea-girt Eleusa.^g A skilful man observes those rocks near the land, under which the Anthias dwell : caverned rocks, cleft with many a covert. Sailing up in his boat he makes a loud noise by striking planks together ; and the heart of the Anthias rejoices in the din, and one haply rises presently from the sea, gazing at the boat and the man. Then the fisher straightway lets down into the waves the ready bait of Perch or Crowfish, offering a first meal of hospitality. The fish rejoices and greedily feasts on the welcome banquet and fawns upon the crafty fisherman. As to the house of a hospitable man there comes one famous for deeds of hand or head, and his host is glad to see him at his hearth and entreats him well with gifts and feast and all manner of loving-kindness ; and at the table both rejoice and take their pleasure in pledging cup for cup ; even so the fisher rejoices in hope and smiles while the fish delights in new banquets. Thenceforward the fisherman journeys to the rock every day and relaxes not his labour and ceases not to bring food. And straightway the Anthias gather all together in the place to feast, as if a summoner brought them. Always for more and readier fishes he provides the coveted food, and they have no thought of other paths or other retreats, but there they remain and linger, even as in the winter days the flocks abide in the steadings of the shepherds and care not to go forth even a little from the fold. And when the fishes descry the boat that feeds them starting from the land and speeding with the oars, immediately they are all alert and gaily they wheel over the sea, sporting delightfully, and go to meet their nurse. As when the mother Swallow, the bird that first heralds^a the West Wind^b of Spring, brings food to her unfledged nestlings and they with soft cheeping leap for joy about their mother in the nest and open their beaks in their desire for food, and all the house of some hospitable man resounds with the shrill crying of the mother bird ; even so the fishes leap joyfully to meet their feeder as he comes, even as in the circle of a dance. And the fisherman fattening them with dainty after dainty and with his hand stroking them and proffering them his gifts from his hand, tames their friendly heart, and anon they obey him like a master, and wheresoever he indicates with his finger,^a there they swiftly rush. Now behind the boat, now in front, now landward he points his hand ; and thou shalt see them, like boys in a place of wrestling, according to the wisdom of a man, rushing this way or that as their master bids. But when he has tended them enough and bethinks him of taking them, then he seats himself with a line in his left hand and fits thereto a hook, strong and sharp. Then all the fishes alike he turns away, commanding them with his hand, or he takes a stone and casts it in the water, and they dive after it, thinking it to be food. One picked fish alone he leaves, whichsoever he will—unhappy fish, rejoicing in a banquet which is to be its last. Then he reaches down the hook over the sea and the fish swiftly seizes its doom ; and the bold fisher draws it in with both hands, winning a speedy prey by his cunning. And he avoids the notice of the rest of the company of Anthias ; for if they see or hear the din of the unhappy victim being landed, then the fisher will never more have banquets enough to tempt the fishes to return, but they spurn with loathing both his attentions and the place of destruction.

But the fisher should be a powerful man and land his fish by force of strength or else a second man should lend a hand in his labour. For so, unwitting of their crafty doom, fattened themselves they fitly fatten others ; and always when thou wilt, successful fishing shall be thine.

Others trust in their valiant might and strength of limb when they array the great adventure against the Anthias, not cultivating friendship nor proffering food but having recourse at once to the pointed hook and overcoming the fish by their valour. The hook is fashioned of hard bronze or iron, and two separate barbs are attached to the great rope of twisted flax. On it they fix a live Basse—if a live one be at hand ; but if it be a dead one, speedily one puts in its mouth a piece of lead, which they call a dolphin ^a ; and the fish, under the weight of the lead, moves his head to and fro, as if alive. The line is strong and well-woven. When the Anthias hear the noise and leap from the sea, then some attend to the labour of the oar, while the fisherman from the stern-end lets down the crooked snare into the sea, gently waving it about. And the fishes all straightway follow the ship and seeing before their eyes what seems to be a fleeing fish, they rush in haste after the banquet, each striving to outstrip the other : thou wouldest say it was a foeman plying swift knees in pursuit of a routed foe : and they are eager for goodly victory. Now whichever fish the fisher sees to be best, to it he offers the banquet, and with eager gape it rushes after the gift that is no gift. Thereupon thou shalt see the valour of both, such a struggle there is as man and captive fish contend. His strong arms and brows and shoulders and the sinews of his neck and ankles swell ^a with might and strain with valour ; while the fish, chafing with pain, makes a fight, pulling against the pulling fisher, striving to dive into the sea, raging incontinently. Then the fisher bids his comrades plunge in their oars ; and as the ship speeds forward, he on the stern is dragged bodily backward by the rush of the fish, and the line whistles, and the blood drips from his torn hand. But he relaxes not the grievous contest. As two keen men of mighty valour stretch their grasp ^b about one another and endeavour each to pull the other, hauling with backward strain ; and long time both, enduring equal measure of toil, pull might and main and are pulled ; even so between those, the fisher and the fish, strife arises, the one eager to rush away, the other eager to pull him in. Nor do the other Anthias fishes desert the captive in his agony but are fain to help him ^c and violently hurl their backs against him and fall each one upon him, foolishly, and know not that they are afflicting their comrade. Often also when they are fain to tear through the line with their jaws, they are helpless, since their mouth is unarmed.^d At last when the fish is weary with labour and pain and the quick rowing, the man overpowers him and pulls him in.

But if the fisher yield to him even a little, he cannot pull him in—so tremendous is his strength. Often he tears and cuts the line on his sharp spine and rushes away, leaving the fisherman empty-handed. A like strength is possessed by the Beauty-fish ^a and the race of the Orcynus ^b and others of monstrous body that roam the deep ; and even by such arms are they captured.

Others the fisherman catches with the wile of food and feast. A good fish will be the Black Sea-bream,^c which ever rejoices in rough rocks.^d Plait a round weel^e as large as may be, fashioning it with Iberian broom^f or withes and putting staves round it. Let the entrance be smooth and the belly yawning wide. As bait, put within it reptile Poulpe or Crayfish, in either case broiled^g on the fire ; for the savour entices the fishes within. Having thus prepared the plaited deceit, lean it obliquely beside a rock, to be an ambush under the sea. And immediately the odour will rouse the Black Sea-bream and he will come within the weel, not very confident on his first journey, but with all haste he makes his meal and speeds away again. Thereafter the weel-fisher puts in the weel ever fresh pleasant food for them and ill-omened gluttony speedily gathers them within, and one fish brings another comrade to share the banquet. At length without fear they gather all together within the weel and remain sitting therein all the day, as if they had acquired a house, and an evil nest they find it. As when to the house of a fatherless youth his age-fellows, who study not sobriety, gather all day bidden and unbidden, wasting evermore the possessions of the masterless house, in such practices as foolish young men are incited to by the waywardness of youth, and in their folly find an evil end ; even so for the gathered fishes doom stands nigh at hand. For when they become many and fat, then the man puts a well-fitting cover on the mouth of the weel and takes captive the fishes huddling within the enclosure and sleeping their last sleep. Too late they perceive their doom and struggle and strive to get out—foolish fishes who find the weel no longer so pleasant a home.

Against the Admon^a they prepare in autumn a weel of osiers and moor it in the midst of the waves, fastening to the bottom a bored stone^b by way of anchor, while corks^c support the trap above. In it they always put four wet stones from the beach. On the wet stones grows a milky slime of the sea, desire for which attracts the wretched little fishes, a greedy race, which gather and rush to the weel and remain in its embrace. The Admon, seeing them gathered within the hollow retreat, all speedily rush upon them, eager for a feast. But them they do not overtake : they easily slip away : but the Admon are nowise able, for all their endeavour, to escape again from the plaited ambush, but, preparing woe for others, they find destruction for themselves. As when some hunter on the hills prepares a trap in the woods for a wild beast and with hard heart ties up a dog,^a fastening him by a cord about his private parts ; the loud howling of the dog in pain travels afar and the wood resounds about him ; the Leopard hears and is glad and hastes to track the cry ; swiftly she arrives and leaps upon the dog ; then a hidden device snatches the dog aloft, while the Leopard rolls headlong in the pit, and has no more thought of feasting but of flight ; but for it there is no escape prepared : even such is the fate of the hapless Admon and in place of food they rush upon their fate and the unescapable net of Hades.

In like fashion for the Shad ^b also and the Pilchard ^b one devises capture in the autumn and so one takes the Larinus ^c and the tribes of the Trachurus.^d The fisherman weaves compactly a weel of broom and therein puts a cake of parched vetches,^e moistened with fragrant wine, and mixes therewith the tear ^f of the Assyrian daughter of Theias ^g : who, they say, did a deed of ill contrivance for love of her father and came into his bed, through the anger of such exudation : Herod. ii. 96 τὸ δὲ δάκρυον κόμμι ἐστίν. Aphrodite ; but since the doom of the gods rooted her and the tree that bears her name, she wails and mourns her woeful fate, wetted with tears for the sake of her bed : her holy sap the fisher mingles with the rest and moors his weel in the waves ; and swiftly the lily fragrance runs over the sea and summons the herds of various kind ; and the fishes moved by the sweet breath obey the call and speedily the weel is filled, bringing to the fisherman a recompense of goodly spoil.

The Saupes ^a always delight above all things in moist seaweed ^b and by that bait also they are taken. On previous days the fisherman sails to one place and always casts in the waves stones of a handy size, to which he has fastened fresh seaweed. But when the fifth morn sees his toil and the gathered Saupes feed about that place, then he arrays his crafty weel. Within it he casts stones wrapped in seaweed and about the mouth he binds such grasses of the sea as Saupes and other plant-eating fishes delight in. Then the fishes gather and eat the grasses and thereafter speed inside the weel. Straightway the fisher sails swiftly to the spot and pulls up the weel. His work is done silently, the men not speaking and the oars hushed. For silence ^c is profitable in all fishing but above all ^d in the case of the Saupes ; since their wits are easily scared and a scare renders vain the labour of the fisher.

No fish, I declare, delights in meaner bait than doth the Red Mullet^a ; for it feeds on all the silt^b of the sea that it can find and it loves especially evil-smelling food. It delights exceedingly in the rotting bodies of men, when the dolorous sea makes any man its prey. Wherefore fishers easily take them with smelly baits which have a hateful breath. Red Mullets and Swine,^c I declare, have like habits, wallowing always in filth for the desire of the belly : and the Red Mullets have the same distinction among the finny tribes as Swine have among the herds of the land.

The Melanurus^d thou shalt not easily beguile and carry away either with weel or with the encircling net. For the Melanurus among all fishes is eminent at once for cowardice and for prudence, and gluttonous bait^e is never pleasing to it. Always when the sea is calm it lies in the sands and rises not from the brine. But when under stress of violent winds the sea rages and billows, then do the Melanurus alone speed over the sea together, fearing not any man nor any creature of the sea. While all the rest for fear dive to the nether foundations of the sea, the Melanurus haunt the sounding shores or draw to the rocks as they roam in search of any food that the wind-beaten sea may show them. Foolish fishes ! which know not how much more cunning are men, who take them captive despite all their endeavour to escape. When the sea boils with stormy flood, a man stands upon a jutting sea-beaten cliff,^a where the wave bellows loudly on the rocks, and scatters dainties ^b in the breaking waves, even cheese mixed with flour ^c; and the Melanurus rush eagerly upon the welcome food. But when they are gathered together within range of his cast, he himself turns his body aside, that he may not cast his shadow on the water, and the fish be frightened. In his hands he holds ready a thin rod and a thin line of light hair all untwined, whereon are strung numerous light hooks. On these he puts the same bait as before he cast in the water, and lets it down into the deep turmoil of the waves. Seeing it the Melanurus immediately rush upon it and snatch—their own destruction. Nor does the fisher hold his hand at rest, but ever and again draws up his hooks from the eddying waters, even if they be often empty. For in the seething sea he cannot mark for certain whether a fish is hooked or whether it is but the waves that shake the line. But when a fish swallows the hook, swiftly he pulls him forth, ere he thinks of guile, ere he cause fright to the feeble Melanurus. In such wise he accomplishes his treacherous fishing in stormy weather.

^b The mode of capture here described seems to be identical with the modern method as described by Apost. p. 49 : “ Pendant l’été on pêche, dans les Sporades, les oblades [M.G. μελανούρια] et les daurades avec des bouchons de liège (φελλάρια). L’appareil est ainsi disposé : on pierce le liège et on fait passer une racine anglaise [sheep-gut] à l’un des bouts. On attache un hameçon, à l’autre bout un morceau de bois pour empêcher la racine de sortir. On retire la racine et quand le hameçon vient toucher le liège, on le couvre de pâte

de farine mêlée de fromage [cf. τῦπον ὄμοιν Δῆμητρι μεμιγμένον 463] et on laisse le liège, amorcé, libre dans la mer. Les poissons en venant manger l'appât avalent aussi l'hameçon. Lorsqu'ils se déplacent ils entraînent avec eux le liège, ce qu'avertit le pêcheur qui vient les ramasser. Cette pêche est excessivement amusante. Quand on emploie une grande quantité de lièges et que le poisson mord, c'est un perpétuel va-et-vient pour décrocher les poissons qui s'y sont pris et amorcer de nouveau les engins."

Yea, and the Grey Mullet,^a albeit he is no glutton,^b they yet deceive by clothing narrow hooks with bait mixed with flour and gifts of curdled milk.^c Therewith they knead also the sweet-smelling herb of mint. Mint, men say, was once a maid^d beneath the earth, a Nymph of Cocytus, and she lay in the bed of Aidoneus ; but when he raped the maid Persephone from the Aetnaean hill, then she complained loudly with overweening words and raved foolishly for jealousy, and Demeter in anger trampled upon her with her feet and destroyed her. For she had said that she was nobler of form and more excellent in beauty than dark-eyed Persephone and she boasted that Aidoneus would return to her and banish the other from his halls : such infatuation leapt upon her tongue. And from the earth sprang the weak herb that bears her name. Mint, then, the fishers mingle with the bait which they put upon their hooks. And in no long time the Grey Mullet, when the odour reaches him, first approaches the hook distantly and regards with eyes askance the snare ; like to a stranger who, chancing upon much trodden cross-ways,^a stands pondering, and at one moment his heart is set on going by the left road, at another by the right, and he looks on this side and on that and his mind fluctuates like the wave and only at long last he reaches a single purpose ; even so also the spirit of the Grey Mullet ponders variously, now thinking of a snare and now of harmless food. At last his mind impels him and brings him nigh his doom. And immediately he starts back in fear and many times as he touches it, terror seizes him and checks his impulse. As when a little maiden girl, when her mother is abroad, is faint for some eatable or whatever it may be ; and to touch it she is afraid for the anger of her mother, yet, unwilling to withdraw, she dares the deed : stealthily she creeps to it and again turns away ; now courage, now fear enters her heart ; and always her keen eyes are strained watchfully upon the door : even so then the gentle fish approaches and retires. But when he takes heart and draws nigh, not readily does he touch the bait but first lashes with his tail and stirs the hook to see whether haply there is any warm breath in its body ; for to eat of aught living is for the Grey Mullet a thing forsworn. Then he nibbles and plucks at the bait with the tip of his mouth ; and straightway the fisher strikes and pierces him with the bronze, even as a charioteer constrains a gallant horse by the stern compulsion of the bit, and pulls him up and casts him struggling on the loathed earth.

The epithet "holy" is taken by the schol. as a mere colourless epithet (ἱερὴν μεγάλην), but we rather imagine it to refer to the position of Massalia (Massilia) as the great outpost of Hellenic culture in the West. Under the Empire especially it was, as it were, a great University town: Strabo 181 πάντες γὰρ οἱ χαρίεντες πρὸς τὸ λέγειν τρέπονται καὶ φιλοσοφεῖν, ὥσθ' ἡ πόλις μικρὸν μὲν πρότερον τοῖς βαρβάροις ἀνεῖτο παιδευτήριον καὶ φιλέλληνας κατεσκεύαζε τοὺς Γαλάτας ὥστε καὶ τὰ συμβόλαια

The Swordfish ^a also men deceive by deadly hooks. But the doom of the Swordfish is not such as that of the Grey Mullet nor like that of other fishes. For the fishermen do not put bait upon their hooks, but the hook hangs from the line naked and without deceit, furnished with two recurved barbs, while some three palms above it they tie a soft white fish, fastening it skilfully by the tip of its mouth. When the furious Swordfish comes, straightway he rends the body of the fish with his fierce sword, and as the fish is rent, its members slip down from the fastening and are entangled right about the barbs of the hook. But the fish perceives not the crooked guile but swallows the grievous bait and is caught and hauled up by the might of the man.

Many are the devices which fishers contrive against the Swordfish, and those above all who fish the Tyrrhenian ^b tract of sea and about the holy city of Massalia ^c and in the region of the Celts.^d For there, wondrous and not at all like fishes, range

This on the whole seems more likely than that the reference is to the foundation of Massalia under the direct guidance of Ἄρτεμις Ἐφεσία (Diana of the Ephesians) whose temple was a conspicuous feature of the city (Strabo 179). monster Swordfishes unapproachable. The fishermen fashion boats in the likeness of the Swordfishes themselves, with fishlike body and swords, and steer to meet the fish. The Swordfish shrinks not from the chase, believing that what he sees are not benched ships but other Swordfishes, the same race as himself, until the men encircle him on every side. Afterwards he perceives his folly when pierced by the three-pronged spear; and he has no strength to escape for all his desire but perfors is overcome. Many a time as he fights the valiant fish with his sword pierces in his turn right through the belly of the ship; and the fishers with blows of brazen axe swiftly strike all his sword from his jaws, and it remains fast in the ship's wound like a rivet, while the fish, orphaned of his strength, is hauled in. As when men devising a trick of war against their foes, being eager to come within their towers and city, strip the armour from the bodies of the slain and arm themselves therewith and rush nigh the gates; and the others fling open their gates as for their own townsmen in their haste, and have no joy of their friends; even so do boats in his own likeness deceive the Swordfish.

Moreover, when encircled in the crooked arms of the net the greatly stupid Swordfish perishes by his own folly. He leaps in his desire to escape but near at hand he is afraid of the plaited snare and shrinks back again and forgetteth what manner of weapon is set in his jaws and like a coward remains aghast till they hale him forth upon the beach, where with downward-sweeping blow of many spears men crush his head, and he perishes by a foolish doom.

Folly slays also the Mackerel ^a and the fat Tunny and the Needle-fishes and the tribes of the wide-spread Dentex. The Mackerels, when they see others crouching in the net, are fain to enter the many-meshed snare of destruction—such delight possesses them when they behold: like untried children who, when they see the bright flashing of blazing fire, rejoice in its rays and are fain to touch it and stretch a childish hand into the flame, and speedily the fire proves unkind; even so the Mackerels are fain to rush within the covert of the ambush whence there is no return and find their fondness fatal. Then some land in the wider meshes and leap out, but others, penned in the narrower openings, suffer a bitter fate by strangling. When the net is hauled ashore, thou shalt see them in multitudes on either side fixed as with nails, some still minded to enter the net of destruction, others already eager to escape from their evil plight, held fast within the dripping nets.

The Tunnies again suffer like affliction with the Mackerel by their foolishness. For they also are possessed by a similar fatal desire to come within the loins of the crafty net; they do not however essay to enter the belly of the net under water but assail it with their crooked teeth, devising to make a passage sufficient for their body. The wet net becomes stretched about their infixed teeth and they have no means of escape, but labouring under the entanglement about their mouth they are haled to the land, taken by their own witlessness.

Such also is the counsel of the Needle-fishes.^a These when they have escaped the bosom of the net and are gotten free from trouble, turn again ^a and in their anger fix their teeth in the net; and it enters into their mouths and holds fast the close-set teeth within.

The Dentex ^b travel in separate bands, like companies of soldiers. When a man lets down a hook for them, they stand aloof and all bend sidelong looks on one another and are unwilling to approach. But when one leaps forth from another rank and swiftly seizes the bait, then also one of them takes courage in his heart and draws nigh to the hook and is haled in. The Dentex, eyeing one another and delighting in their banquet, rejoice even while they are being caught, and they vie with one another as to which shall die first, like children exulting in their sports.

The breed of Tunnies ^c comes from the spacious Ocean, and they travel into the regions of our sea ^d when they lust after the frenzy of mating in spring. First the Iberians who plume themselves upon their might capture them within the Iberian brine^a; next by the mouth of the Rhone the Celts and the ancient inhabitants of Phocaea^b hunt them; and thirdly those who are dwellers in the Trinacrian isle^c and by the waves of the Tyrrhenian sea. Thence in the unmeasured deeps they scatter^d this way or that and travel over all the sea. Abundant and wondrous is the spoil for fishermen when the host of Tunnies set forth in spring. First of all the fishers mark a place in the sea which is neither too straitened under beetling banks nor too open to the winds, but has due measure of open sky and shady coverts. There first a skilful Tunny-watcher^e ascends a steep high hill,^f who remarks the various shoals, their kind and size,^g and informs^h his comrades.

^a Analogous to the "Hooer" in the Cornish Pilchard fishing: A. 537 a 19 πολλάκις δὲ καὶ οἱ θυννοσκόποι περιβάλλονται καθεύδοντας; Theocr. iii. 25 f. ἐς κύματα τηνῶ ἀλεῦμαι | ὡπέρ τῶς θύννως σκοπιάζεται Ὁλπις ὁ γριπεύς. Hence metaphorically Aristoph. Eq. 312 f. δοτις [i.e. Cleon] ἡμῶν τὰς Ἀθήνας ἔκκεκώφωκας βοῶν, | κάπο τῶν πετρῶν δινωθεν τοὺς φόρους θυννοσκοπῶν. Cf. Suid. s.v. Alciph. i. 20 ὁ σκοπιωρός in same sense.

^f The outlook, θυννοσκοπείον, Strabo 223; 225; 834, etc., was sometimes a high mast (Varr. ap. Non. i. p. 49; cf. Philostr. Imag. i. 13 σκοπιωρέεται γάρ τις ἀφ' ὑψηλοῦ ξύλου), sometimes a more elaborate platform (Ael. xv. 5).

^g According to Plut. Mor. 980 a he was helped in his computation by the cubical formation of the shoal: ὁ γοῦν θυννοσκόπος, ἀν ἀκριβῶς λάβῃ τὸν ἀριθμὸν τῆς ἐπιφανείας, εὐθὺς ἀποφαίνεται τόσον καὶ ἄπαν τὸ πλῆθος ἔστιν, εἰδὼς δὲ καὶ τὸ βάθος αὐτῶν ἐν ἵσῳ τεταγμένον στοιχείῳ πρός τε τὸ πλάτος ἔστι καὶ τὸ μῆκος.

OTHER fishes doth tender love make for fishermen the spoil of their chase, and fatal mating they find and fatal their passion, hastening their own ruin through desire. But do thou, I pray thee, mightiest of kings who have cities in their keeping, both thyself, O Antoninus^a and thy son of noble heart, graciously give ear and take pleasure in these delights of the sea wherewith the kindly Muses have furnished forth my mind and have crowned me with the gift divine of song and given me to mix a sweet draught for your ears and for your mind.

O cruel Love, crafty of counsel, of all gods fairest to behold with the eyes, of all most grievous when thou dost vex the heart with unforeseen assault, entering the soul like a storm-wind and breathing
the bitter menace of fire, with hurricane of anguish and untempered pain. The shedding of tears is for thee a sweet delight and to hear the deep-wrung groan; to inflame a burning redness in the heart and to blight and wither the bloom upon the cheek, to make the eyes hollow and to wrest all the mind to madness.^b Many thou dost even roll to doom, even those whom thou meetest in wild and wintry sort, fraught with frenzy; for in such festivals is thy defence and cutting through the line with his teeth ^a rescues his comrade and destroys the snare and grieves the fisherman. And ere now, when a Parrot-wrasse has been taken in the plaited weel,^b another has stolen him away and saved him from destruction. For when the dappled fish falls into the ambush of the weel, immediately he perceives it and tries to escape from his evil plight. Turning down his head and eyes he swims back tailwards along the barrier, for he dreads the sharp rushes which bristle around the entrance and as he comes against them wound his eyes, even as if they were warders of the gate. The others, seeing him wheeling about helplessly, come from the outside to his aid and leave him not in his distress. And someone of them, I ween, reaches his tail through the weel like a hand for his comrade inside to grasp ; and he seizes it in his teeth and the other pulls him forth from death, while he holds in his mouth the guiding tail as a chain. Often too the fish that is caught in the weel puts forth his own tail and another grasps it and pulls him forth in its train. By such devices do they escape doom. As when under the darkness of shadowy night men climb a rugged hill, when the moon is hidden and the curtains of the clouds are

^c This method is still in use: "La pêche du scare, dans certaines îles des Cyclades, telles que Amorgos, Pholégandre, etc. dans les parages desquels sont confinés ces poissons, se fait absolument de la même manière aujourd'hui. Ainsi on tâche, avant tout, de pêcher une femelle du scare. Cela fait, dark: they labour sorely, wandering in gloom and untrodden ways, and hold each the other's hands^a and pull and are pulled, a helpful exchange of toil; even so those fishes help each other in mutual love. But just this devises destruction^b for the poor fishes and fatal and sorrowful they find their love when they are destroyed by the craft of fishermen. Four fishers embark on a swift boat, of whom two attend to the labour of the oar while the third weaves a crafty device. Fastening a female^c Parrot-wrasse by the tip of the mouth he drags it along in the waves by a flaxen cord. A live fish it is best to tow: but if she be dead, then she receives in her mouth the contrivance of a leaden dolphin.^d On the other side of the line another rounded heavy cube of lead is hung at the end of the cord. The dead female trailing in the waves like a living fish is haled along by the fisherman. A fourth fisher tows near at hand a deep ensnaring weel facing towards the fish. The spotted Parrot-wrasses when they see the trailing female rush all together in eager haste to rescue her and throng all about the decoy, impelled by the goad of frenzied desire. The men with their oars urge on the boat with all their might, while the fishes follow eagerly: and soon it proves their last attempt to

^a Schol. θύρετρα· τέλη. Cf. Poll. iii. 147 ἦν δὲ παύονται, τέλος καὶ τέρμα καὶ βατήρ. Θύρετρα in this sense seems unique.
 But it is exactly paralleled by the use of fores of the doors of the carcer or carceres at the end (usually starting end) of the aid. For when the wit of the fisher perceives them stronging and raging incontinently in their lust after the female, he puts in the weel line and lead together and the weight of the lead pulls the female Parrot-wrasse within. Then the males together, soon as they see it, so soon they rush in emulous haste, speeding to the plaited net of death and with their eager troops the withy vestibule and grievous mouth of the gates are straitened : such goads of passion urge them on. As men who engage in the contest of the footrace dart swiftly from the line and forward and ever forward strain their speedy limbs and haste to accomplish the long course ; and the desire of every man is to reach the goal and to win the sweet triumph of victory and dash within the lists^a and crown them with the athletic prize : even so doth like passion lead those fishes to the house of Hades—to rush within the coverts of an ambush whence there is no return. And, with their fatal and final madness of desire, of their own motion they fulfil the fishermen's desire of spoil.

Others again put a living female within the dark weel and place it under those rocks which the milky Parrot-wrasse affects. Beguiled by the amorous breath of love the Wrasses gather around and lick about and search everywhere to find the entrance of the weel. And speedily they come upon the entry—wide, but with a fence beyond escape—and they rush in altogether in a crowd and there is no means of getting out, but they find a hateful issue to their desires. Even as one who devises a

guileful doom for birds hides in a dense thicket a female bird,^a his tame companion in hunting birds of the same cry ; and she shrilly pipes her sweet ^b song, and the birds, hearing, all hasten towards her and rush of themselves into the snare, misled by the call of the female cry : like unto them the Parrot-wrasses rush into the belly of the weel.

A like doom does love bring upon the Grey Mullets ^c (Cephalus) ; for they also are beguiled by a female ^d trailed in the waves. She should be in good condition and fat of limb. For so, when they behold her, they gather around in countless numbers and wondrously overcome by her beauty they will not leave her but everywhere the spells of desire lead them charmed, yea even wert thou to draw forth the female snare from the water and lead them to the unfriendly dry land : they follow in a body, and heed neither fraud nor fishermen. But even as youths when they remark the face of a woman exceeding fair first gaze at her from afar, admiring her lovely form, and thereafter they draw near and,

This fishing is pursued from April to the end of June.

^a H. ii. 121 n. For the method of fishing here mentioned cf. Apost. p. 51 "Oppien dit que, quand on tire derrière le forgetting all, walk no more in their former ways but follow her with delight, beguiled by the sweet spells of Aphrodite : even so shalt thou behold the humid crowd of the Mullets passionately thronging. But swiftly with them love turns to hate ; for speedily the fisher lifts the well-wrought net and spreads its lap and takes spoil unspeakable, easily enveloping the fishes in the embrace of the meshes.

The Cuttle-fishes,^a again, of unhappy passion run to a greater height of infatuation. For them neither deadly weel nor encircling net do the toilsome fishers of the sea set but merely trail in the waves a single female attached to a line. The Cuttle-fishes, when they behold it from afar, speedily come to meet it and twine about it and cling to it with their arms : even as maidens cling about brother or kindly father whom after many days they see returned safe to his own halls from a foreign land, or as a maid that is newly taken captive in the yoke of wedded love, the pleasant bond of marriage, embraces her bridegroom and all night long twines about his neck the bondage of her snowy arms : even so in that hour the crafty Cuttle-fishes twine about one another and the work of their passion abates not until the fishermen draw them forth upon the boat. And still they cling and with desire take death.

The Cuttle-fishes, indeed, men also beguile with weels in the spring season. The weels they cover emploient souvent le même procédé mais quelquefois ils remplacent la femelle, que l'on a peine à se procurer, par un mannequin de seiche, si je puis m'exprimer ainsi, appareil en bois ayant la forme d'une seiche. Sur sa partie convexe sont incrustés des morceaux de miroir. On tire cette seiche en bois, nommée ξυλόσουπια, σπιγιάλι, derrière le bateau. Les poissons qui la suivent se pêchent au haveneau."

^a Tamarix tetrandra. This and κόμαρος, Arbutus unedo, are mentioned among evergreens, Theophrast. H.P. i. 9.

^b The κόσσυφος and the κίχλη are mostly mentioned together: A. 599 b 6 κατὰ συζυγίας δὲ οἱ πετραῖοι φωλοῦσιν οἱ ἄρρενες τοῖς θήλεσιν, ὕσπερ καὶ νεοτεύουσιν, οἷον κίχλαι, κόττυφοι; 607 b 14 μεταβάλλουσι δὲ καὶ οὓς καλοῦσι κοττύφους καὶ κίχλας . . . τὸ χρῶμα κατὰ τὰς ὥρας, . . . τοῦ μὲν γὰρ ἔαρος μέλανες γίνονται, εἴτα ἐκ τοῦ ἔαρος λευκοὶ πάλιν. Cf. Ael. xii. 28; Diocl. ap. Athen. 305 b οἱ δὲ πετραῖοι καλούμενοι . . . κόσσυφοι, κίχλαι; Numen. ibid. μελάγχρων κόσσυφον ἢ κίχλας ἀλειδέας; Aristot. ibid. τὰ μὲν μελανοστικτα, ὕσπερ κόσσυφος, τὰ δὲ ποικιλοστικτα, with branches of tamarisk ^a or green leaves of arbutus or other foliage and place them on the sandy beaches. And the Cuttle-fishes in their desire for breeding and mating hasten within the weel and settle amid the foliage and there cease from their desire and cease also from their wretched life, being haled up by the cunning fishermen.

Beyond all the finny brood the Merle-wrasse ^b endures a sorrowful love and it is for the Thrush-wrasse that he burns his heart, raging with frenzy and with jealousy, that grievous god. The Merle has neither one marriage-bed nor one bride nor one bridal chamber, but many are his spouses and many separate clefts hide the home and bed of his wives. Therein evermore the Thrushes dwell all day in their hollow retreats, like newly wedded brides, whom one would never see coming forth from their chamber; but nuptial shame burns in their hearts; even so the Thrushes always abide retired each one within her chamber, wherever her husband himself commands. The Merle, on the other hand, sits by upon the rocks and never leaves them, ever keeping watch over his bed, and he never turns otherwhere but all day wheels about, now looking to this chamber, ωσπερ κίχλη. The κίχλη is mentioned separately Nicandr. ap. Athen. 305 d as πολυώνυμος, cf. Pancrat. ibid. 305 c; also Epicharm. ibid., A. 605 a 17, 598 a 11; Plin. xxxii. 9 turdus inter saxatiles nobilis. The κόσσυφος is mentioned separately, Phil. 99; Plin. xxx. 11 merula inter saxatiles laudata; Ov. Hal. 114 merulaeque virentes; Ael. i. 14 and 15. They are clearly closely allied species of Wrasse (Labridae, M.G. πετρόψαρο, χεῖλος). In M.G. κοτσίφι is Crenilabrus pavo; κίχλα is Coricus rostratus. Oppian seems to take κόσσυφος and κίχλη to be merely the male and female of the same species, and Aelian, ll. cc., in paraphrasing Oppian, mentions the κόσσυφος only.

now to that. And his mind is not set upon foraging nor has he any other business, but in unhappy jealousy keeps his tedious and eternal vigil over his brides : only at night he takes thought of food and rests for as short a space as may be from the labour of his ceaseless watch. But when the Thrushes are in the travail of birth, then incontinently he rushes fluttering around and visits now one wife, now another, as if he were greatly anxious for the issue of their travail. Even as a mother is distraught with the burden of her heart when she trembles for the sharp pain of her only daughter in travail of her first child : for that is the great dread of women : and on herself no less comes the wave of the pangs of Eileithyia,^a and she roams everywhere throughout the halls, praying and groaning in suspense of heart, until she hears from within the cry that delivers from pain : even so the Merle, trembling for his wives, burns greatly in his heart. Such a custom methinks of marriage I hear that the Assyrians practise, who have their cities beyond the Tigris stream and the inhabitants of Bactra, a nation of archers. For them also several different wives deal with the marriage-bed and night about all share the nuptial couch. And the goad of grievous jealousy haunts them and by jealousy they perish, ever one against another whetting bitter war. So true it is that no more evil bane waxes among men than jealousy, which causes much groaning and much lamentation. Jealousy is the companion of shameless madness and with madness it gladly consorts and dances into grievous infatuation ; and the end thereof is destruction. Jealousy too it is that leads the unhappy Merle to be the victim of infatuation and a bitter requital he finds for his many brides. For when the fisherman perceives him wheeling upon the rocks in trouble about his wives, with all speed he puts upon a strong hook a live Prawn ^a and above the hook is hung a heavy cube of lead. And stealthily he launches his deadly snare beside the rocks and dangles it near the very bridal chambers of the Merle. He espies it and is straightway roused and charges, thinking that the Prawn is coming within his halls with hostile intent to beds and brides. Straightway rushing he thinks to avenge with his jaws the invasion of the Prawn, and perceives not that he is swallowing his own doom. The fisher watching him straightway strikes home and transfixes him with his barbs of bronze, and hales him forth indignant and writhing in his last struggle, and haply he chides with such mocking words as these : "Now then, now watch and guard thy wives, wretched fish, and abide at home rejoicing in thy brides ! for one love and one bed did not content thee, but thou didst glory, a single husband, in so many. Nay, come hither, bridegroom, thy bride is ready—the blaze of landward fire wreathed with white." So haply he rebukes him, albeit speaking to deaf ears. But the Thrushes, when their guardian husband dies, wander forth from their chambers and share his doom.

Moreover, through love and mutual help perish also the Galeus ^b Dog-fishes and the tribes of the dark Spiny Dog-fishes ^c; a white fish ^d is bound upon the hook and the fisherman goes where the dark mud lies long fathoms deep and lets down his hook and swiftly some fish meets it and seizes his doom. And he is straightway pulled in and the others perceiving it all follow close in a body, until they come right to the boat and the fishermen. Then one may take them—some with the curving circle of the bag-net,^a some with downward-sweeping^b blows of the iron trident or by other devices. For they do not turn to flee while they see their comrade being haled, but wish to perish with him. Even as when parents convey from the house to the tearful tomb the body of their newly slain boy—their only son for whom they have laboured much and vainly—and tearing their cheeks for grief they bewail their child and cling to the grave and are unwilling to return home but rather would die with the lamented dead : even so the fishes will not leave the captured fish till they die the same death at the hands of the fishers.

Others are taken by a passion strange and not native to the brine, which wakes in fishes a landward frenzy foreign to the sea : such as the alien love whose shaft smites the Poulpes^c and the race of the Sargues^d which companion with the rocks.^e The Poulpes indeed love the trees of Athena^f and have caught a passion for the grey-green^g foliage. Verily it is a great marvel that their mind should be drawn by desire for a tree and delight in the branches of the oily plant. For wherever there is near the sea an olive of splendid fruit, which flourishes on a shoreward slope neighbouring the sea, thither is the mind of the Poulpe drawn, even as to the track the spirit of the keen-scented Cnosian^a dog, which on the hills searches out the crooked path of the wild beast and tracks it by the unerring guidance of the nose and swiftly seizes it and fails not of its prey but brings it to its master : even so the Poulpe straightway knows that a blooming olive is near at hand, and he comes forth from the deep and crawls upon the land exulting and draws nigh to the trunk of Athena's tree. Then first he coils and twines about the base of the trunk exulting, even as a boy who welcomes his nurse when she is newly come forth and clings about her and lifts his hands to her bosom, fain to put his arms about her neck and shoulders ; even so the Poulpe twines about the trunk, rejoicing in the tree. Thereafter he lays hold with the tips of his suckers and crawls up eagerly and clings about the foliage, grasping now one branch, now another, even as a man who has come home from a foreign land greets his friends who throng to meet him and falls upon their necks ; or as the twining ivy tendril clings about the tall fir-trees and, reaching forth from the root, climbs upwards and overruns the branches everywhere : so does the Poulpe joyfully embrace the sleek branches of the olive and seems to kiss them. But when he has relieved his desire, he crawls back again to the bosom of the sea, having satisfied his love and longing for the olive. The snare of this same love is his undoing, as fishermen know. For they bind together branches of the olive as goodly as may be

^a The line is a κάθετος όρ weighted line (H. iii. 77 n.). The modern practice is entirely analogous: Apost. p. 48 "Pour la pêche du poulpe on fixe au plomb [μόλιθος, μόλυβδος] de l'engin quatre hameçons, dont les pointes sont dirigées en dehors; autour d'eux on met un morceau d'étoffe blanche, pour attirer l'animal qu'on veut capturer. Le poulpe, croyant avoir faire à une bonne proie, allonge ses tentacules pour la saisir, mais il s'y raccroche et périt." Cf. H. iv. 439 n.

^b Cf. Apost. p. 49 "On ne pêche ainsi que les mâles de ce genre de céphalopodes. Cela nous induit à supposer que l'animal, poussé par l'instinct de la reproduction, se colle à cet engin qu'il prend pour une femelle de son espèce."

and put in the midst thereof the lead,^a and tow them from the boat. The Poulpe, when he remarks it, is not unheeding but rushes to embrace his branchy comrades. And not even when he is being haled to capture does he relax the bonds of desire,^b till he is within the boat, nor even while he perishes does he hate the olive.

The Sargues have their hearts possessed by affection for Goats.^c Goats they yearn for and they rejoice exceedingly in the mountain-dwelling beasts, even though they belong themselves to the sea. Surely it is a marvel beyond expectation that mountain-crags and the flashing sea should give birth to tribes that are of one mind together. For when the goatherds bring their bleating flocks to the shore, to bathe in the eddying waves at noontide, at the season when the hot Olympian star ^d arises, then the Sargues, hearing the bleating on the shore and the deep murmur of the herds, rush all together in haste, sluggish though they be, and leap joyfully on the terraces by the sea and fawn upon the horned company and lick them and crowd about them with many a gambol ; and amazement seizes the herdsmen that learn it for the first time. The goats receive the friendly choir not unwillingly and the

^a This account of the capture of the Sargues is paraphrased Ael. i. 23. Captain Cook, Last Voyage, describes a similar method used by the natives of Nootka Sound: "They sometimes decoy animals by covering themselves

Sargues know no satiety of joy. No, not so much in the roofed steadings of the herdsmen do the kids exult about their mothers when they receive them home from pasture with great and joyful welcome, while all the place around rings with the glad cries of the little things, and the heart of the herdsmen smiles, as those Sargues fuss about the horned herds. And when these have had their fill of bathing in the sea, and go back to their folds, then in sorrow do all the Sargues together attend them closely to where the laughter of the utmost wave skirts the land. As when a sorrowing mother speeds her only son, or wife her husband, on his journey to a foreign land afar, and her heart is distraught within her : so wide the waters of the sea that shall lie between, so many the circles of the moons ; standing in the utmost waves of the sea she utters from her lips tearful words, praying him to haste ; and her feet carry her no more eagerly homeward but she has her eyes upon the sea ; even so the Sargues, one would say, shed tears from their eyes, left desolate, when the Goats are driven away. Poor Sargue ! anon methinks thou shalt find thy companioning with the herds of Goats a fatal passion. In such wise does the wit of the fishermen turn thy love into a snare and destruction. First ^a of all a man marks those rocks near the land which rise in twin peaks near together with a narrow space of sea between and with a skin, and running about on all-fours, which they do very nimbly, as appeared from the specimens of their skill which they exhibited to us—making a kind of noise or neighing at the same time ; and on these occasions the masks, or carved heads, as well as the real dried heads of the different animals, are put on." Another method used by the Carians, Ael. xiii. 2.

are open to the rays of the sun : wherein dwell many Sargues which have their habitation together ; for the Sargues delight exceedingly in the beams of the sun. Here the man betakes himself, his limbs clothed in the skin of a goat and two horns fastened to his temples, meditating a rustic trick : and he casts into the sea a bait of barley-meal enriched with goatflesh and roasted meat together. The welcome savour, the deceiving aspect of the man, and the goodly boon of food entice the Sargues, and they think not in their minds of any harm but delighted they remain, fawning round their foeman in the guise of a goat. Unhappy fishes ! how fatal a friend they presently find him, whose mind is no-wise goatlike. For straightway he arrays against them a rough rod and a line of grey flax and puts on the hook the natural flesh of a goat's hoof. They greedily seize the bait and he with stout hand pulls and lands them. For if any of them suspect the work of guile, no more will he come near, even were the fishermen to bring the shaggy goats themselves, but together they take to flight, loathing alike the form of the man and the feast and the sunny spaces of the rock itself. But if the fisher escape their notice and do his work swiftly, none will be left uncaptured, but the goatlike aspect will overcome them all.

Another passion employs the Sargues in the season of spring, even their passion for one another, and they contend about the bridal bed. One male fights for many wives and he who prevails by his valour is sufficient mate for all ; and he drives his female company among the rocks, where the fishermen contrive a deep weel, rounded on all sides, and cover it all about the mouth with foliage of plants, shadowing it cunningly with green branches of myrtle or fragrant bay or some other tree. Now the goad of desire rouses the males to the moil of battle and the war for brides waxes keen. But when one by his prowess wins the victory, straightway he looks for a hollow rock as a dwelling for his wives, and he espies the weel lying, roofed with leafy boughs and therein he drives his choir of brides. They then enter within the weel, while he outside keeps away all the males nor suffers any other to approach his brides. But when he has filled the plaited snare, last, he himself advances into the bridal chamber, a bed of Hades without escape. As when some shepherd drives from the pasture his fleecy flocks and leads them home, and standing in the entrance of the steading reckons in his mind the number of his sheep, reviewing them well to see if all are safe, and the courtyard, full to overflowing, is straitened with the huddling sheep, and last the shepherd himself enters among them ; even so the female Sargues enter first within the hollow retreat, and after them their spouse leaps in himself, hasting unhappy bridegroom with unhappy brides. Such contests does love array among the finny tribe and by such snares of amorous madness they perish.

The Hippurus,^a when they behold anything floating in the waves, all follow it, closely in a body, but especially when a ship is wrecked by the stormy winds, finding Poseidon terribly unkind, and the great waves break her up and carry hither and thither her scattered timbers, loosened by the rending assaults of the sea. Then the shoals of the Hippurus follow in the train of the drifting planks, and the fisherman who chances upon them wins easily great and unstinted spoil. But that may the Son of Cronus, the lord of the deep, avert from our sailors, and may their ships speed over the broad waves with gentle breezes, unhurt and unshaken, while they ply to and fro for cargo ! And for the Hippurus men may contrive other devices and without the wreck of ships pursue their prey.

The fishermen gather reeds and tie them together in bundles which they let down into the waves and underneath they tie a heavy stone by way of ballast. All this they let sway gently in the water ; and straightway the shade-loving tribes of the Hippurus gather in shoals and linger about delightedly rubbing their backs against the reeds. Then the fishers row to them to find a ready prey, and bait their hooks and cast them, and the fish seize them, hastening therewith their own destruction. Even as a hunter excites with meat his dogs to the warfare of the chase, waving among them a piece of game, and the dogs in a frenzy of appetite with ravenous rage run emulous one before the other and look to the man's hand to see where he will throw it, and strife of teeth arises : so the fishes rush readily upon the hooks. And easily, if active, thou shalt catch and land them one after the other ; for they are more eager than the fishermen themselves and by their own folly hasten their doom.

By like craft are the Pilot-fishes^a also taken ; for their heart equally is set upon desire for shade.

Against the Calamaries^b a man should devise a

^a It is amazing to read in Apost. p. 48 "Pour les calmars (Loligo) qui pénètrent dans l'intérieur des ports, on donne au plomb la forme d'un fuseau et l'on dispose, à sa partie inférieure, en couronne, un grand nombre d'aiguilles à coudre. Quand, au contraire, on veut pêcher les sepioteuthis, rod fashioned after the manner of a spindle.^a And about it let him fasten close to one another many hooks with recurring barbs, and on these let him impale the striped body of a Rainbow-wrasse to hide the bent teeth of bronze, and in the green depths of the sea let him trail such snare upon a cord. The Calamary when it sees it, darts up and grasps it in the embrace of its moist tentacles and becomes impaled upon the lips of bronze. And no more can it leave them for all its endeavour but is haled against its will, having of itself entangled its body.

In havens of the sea beyond the wash of the waves some youth in sport contrives a mode of catching Eels.^b He takes a long sheep-gut and lets it trail its length in the water, like a long line. The Eel espies it and rushes up and seizes it. The youth perceives that the Eel has swallowed the bait and straightway blows in the sheep-gut and inflates it with his breath. By his vehement blowing the gut swells up and fills the straining mouth of the wretched Eel; which is straitened and distressed by the human breath, but is held a fast prisoner for all its endeavour to escape, until, swollen and wildly gasping, it swims to the surface and becomes the prey of the fisher. Even as one who makes essay of a full jar, takes a blow-pipe and puts it in his mouth and by drawing in his breath draws with the tip of his lips draught of wine, which streams up under the force of his breathing: so the Eels, swollen by the breath of the youth, are drawn toward the mouth of the crafty blower.

There is a certain timid and strengthless company of fishes, the thronging race of the feeble Fry ^a which are called Anchovies.^b They are a goodly food for all manner of fishes and flight is evermore the burning thought of their minds. They are afraid of all things and they remain huddled with one another in heaps ^c and cling in crowds together, as if they were under the stress of a compelling chain. And thou couldst not contrive to separate the broad swarm of them or loose them each from each : in such sort do they cling to one another. Many a time even ships ^d run aground on them as upon a reef and many a time the rowers on the benches entangle their oars in them and the hastening blade is stayed as if it struck a stony rock. And haply someone lifts straight a heavy-bladed axe and smites the Anchovies, yet does not cleave with the iron the whole mass in twain but cuts off only a tiny portion of the shoal. And the hatchet cuts off the head ^e of one and maims another of its tail and another it cleaves in the midst of the body and yet another it utterly destroys. Pitiful it is to behold their bodies like wretched corpses. Yet not even so do they forget themselves, and they do not relax the chain that binds them : so fast a rivet holds them together. Encountering those fishes a man might gather of them with his hands as if he gathered deep sand. Now when the fishermen behold them huddled together, they gladly enclose them with their hollow seine-nets and without trouble bring ashore abundant booty and fill with the Fry all their vessels and their boats and on the deep beaches pile up heaps, an infinite abundance of spoil. As when the harvesters have finished the work of Deo^a and with help of the winds and the landsman's oars^b have separated the grain, they pile it abundant in the mid space of the round threshing-floor and, full everywhere to overflowing, the ring that receives the wheat shows white within the floor: even so then, filled with the infinite Fry, the brow of the beach beside the sea shows white.

The tribes of the Pelamyds^c are by birth from the Euxine sea and are the offspring of the female Tunny. For these gather by the mouth of the Maeotian Lake^d where it meets the sea, and there amid the wet reed-beds they bethink them of the painful travail of birth. And such of their eggs as they find they eat as they hurry along, but such as remain among the reeds and rushes give birth in due season to the shoals of the Pelamyds. These when first they skim the waves and make essay of travelling hasten to voyage in alien seas and, tiny though they be, will not abide where they were born. There is a tract of the Thracian sea which, as men say, is the deepest in all the demesne of Poseidon : wherefore also it is called the Black Gulf.^a Thereon no over-fierce or violent winds make assault, and in it are coverts under water, cavernous, muddy, beyond thought, in which grow abundantly such things as provide food for tiny fishes. There are the first paths of the new-born swarms of Pelamyds ; since beyond all other creatures of the sea they dread the stormy onset of winter—for winter dulls the light of their eyes. And there in the spacious loins of the sea they linger idly and grow in size while they await the sweet spring ; and there also they mate and fulfil their desire. But when they are full of roe they hasten to travel back to their native wave where they put from them the travail of their belly.

These the Thracians who dwell above ^b the deep expanse of the Black Gulf capture in the unkindly season of winter by a cruel and unpleasant form of fishing under the bloody law of war and savage doom of death.^c They have a stout log, not long but as thick as may be, about a cubit in length. On the end of it are put abundant lead and many three-pronged spears set close together ; and about it runs a well-twisted cable exceeding long. Sailing up in a boat to where the gulf is deepest, mightily they launch into the murky deep the pine-log's stubborn strength. Straightway with swift rush, weighed down by lead and iron, it speeds to the nether foundations of the sea, where it strikes upon the weak Pelamysds huddling in the mud and kills and transfixes as many as it reaches of the hapless crowd. And the fishermen swiftly draw them up, impaled upon the bronze and struggling pitifully under the iron torture. Beholding them even a stone-hearted man would pity them for their unhappy capture and death. For the spear-point has entered the flanks of one, the swift shaft has transfixed the head of another ; one is wounded over the tail, the groin of this, the back of that is victim of the bitter warfare, and yet another is pierced in the midst of the belly. As, when the mellay of battle is decided, their comrades take up the slain out of the dust and blood, and array them for the fiery bed, lamenting ; and many and various are the wounds on the bodies of the dead and every sort of warlike stroke is there : even so on the Pelamysds wounds show everywhere—an image of war but welcome to the fishers.

Others again take the tribes of the feeble Pelamysds with light nets. For always in the darkness, whatever falls upon the sea, they are afraid and they have a horror of the night and in the night they are captured as they flee in terror through the deep. The fishers set up very light nets of buoyant flax and wheel in a circle round about while they violently strike the surface of the sea with their oars and make a din with sweeping blow of poles. At the flashing of the swift oars and the noise the fishes bound in terror and rush into the bosom of the net which stands at rest, thinking it to be a shelter : foolish fishes which, frightened by a noise, enter the gates of doom. Then the fishers on either side hasten with the ropes to draw the net ashore. And, when they see the moving rope, the fish, in vain terror, huddle and cower together and are coiled in a mass. Then would the fisher offer many prayers to the gods of hunting that nothing may leap out of the net nor anything make a move and show the way ; for if the Pelamyds see such a thing, speedily they all bound over the light net into the deep and leave the fishing fruitless. But if none of the sea-roaming gods be angry with the fishermen, then often even when the fishes are haled out of the sea upon the solid shore they will not leave the net but cling to it, afraid even of the eddying rope itself. Even so in the woods the hunters of the hill take the timorous deer by happy hunting-craft. Encircling all the wood with a rope, they bind about it the swift wings ^a of buoyant birds ; and the deer, when they behold it, shrink in vain and empty terror and, idly affrighted by the wings, they will not approach, until the hunters rush upon them and make them their prey.

Moreover, a diver, skilled in the works of the sea, without any snare attacks and captures some fishes with his hands alone, traversing the path of the sea as if it were dry land : to wit, the Sargue ^b which trembles with terror and the craven Sciaena.^c The Sargues in their fear cower and crowd together in the depths of the sea and they lie in piles athwart one another, while their backs bristle with spines erect, even as farmers fence all round with close-set stakes the hedge that runs about a vineyard : a great trouble for robbers ; and none could enter in, since the stakes bar the way. Even so no one would readily touch the Sargues nor lay a hand upon them, for their dark spines bristle about them with close-set jutting points. But the skilful man should dive speedily under the hidden places of the sea and observe the Sargues all round—where lies the head and where the tail—and putting his hand over their heads he should gently stroke ^a their spines above and press and bend them down. The Sargues remain just as they were, clustered together and unmoving, trusting in their sharp defences. Then the man takes two of them, one in either hand, and comes to the surface again, having accomplished a deed of utmost cunning.

The rock-haunting Sciaena, when fear comes upon its heart, rushes eagerly to the reefs and enters some hollow round hole or cleft, or creeps under the sea grasses or the wet weeds ; for it does not study to find such shelter as might admit its whole body and protect it, but seeks only to defend its head, and hiding head and eyes hopes because it does not see to escape the attack of one who sees. Even so in the woods the Antelope, when the ravenous Lion attacks it, turning down its head protects itself with a vain defence and hopes itself unseen, till the deadly beast rushes upon it and rends it, while it remains of like mind as before nor lifts its head, but even while it perishes thinks to escape. Such foolish device also doth the winged bent-necked beast ^a of Libya practise : but its craft is vain. Even so with vain hopes the tender Sciaena hides, for speedily the fisher pulls it forth with his hand and comes to the surface and shows its foolishness.

Even so many devices I know of the fishermen's craft in the sea and bitter destruction for so many fishes. And all the others a like fate overtakes, by weels and hooks and deep-woven net and sweeping trident—some in the day-time, but others evening takes and slays, when at earliest dusk of night with lighted torch ^b the fishers steer their hollow boat, bringing to the resting fishes a darkling doom. Then do the fishes exulting in the oily flame of pine rush about the boat and, to their sorrow seeing the fire at even, meet the stern blow of the trident.

There is another manner of fishing practised by chase in which the fish is pursued and struck with barbed spears, or a long-shafted trident, called a waster, is much practised at the mouth of the Esk and in the other salmon rivers of Scotland. The sport is followed by day and night, but most commonly in the latter, when the fish are discovered by means of torches or fire-grates, filled with blazing fragments of tar-barrels, which shed a strong though partial light upon the water." Burns, Death and Dr. Hornbook, v. 31 "I there wi' Something did forgither | That pat me in an eerie swither ; | An awfu' scythe, outowre ae shouther, | Clear-dangling, hang ; | A three-taed leister on the ither | Lay large and lang." It furnishes a simile to Q. First with many missiles and sweep of poles and assault of oars the fishermen drive the wretched ranks of the finny creatures into one place, some bay broken with many hiding-places. There the fishes creep below the hollow rocks and the fishermen set goodly nets of flax around, encircling them all about, even as if they threw threatening double walls of stone around the foemen. Then a man takes rich white clay together with the root which mediciners call cyclamen^b and mixes them in his hands and kneads two cakes.^c And he leaps over the nets into the sea and about the very caves and chambers of the fishes he smears estimée par les Grecs. C'est un gros hameçon porté par une très longue hampe. Aux détritus de crabes, aux coquilles vides, le pêcheur reconnaît le nid ($\theta\alpha\lambda\alpha\mu$) du céphalopode. Il cherche, en faisant pénétrer son appareil, à décrocher l'animal, qui, fort souvent, sentant le danger, se fixe, par ses ventouses, très solidement contre les parois de son nid. Pour le faire lâcher prise, on attache alors à une hampe un morceau d'étoffe blanche ou des feuilles de tabac ou de κονυζό, que l'on approche du trou. L'animal sort aussitôt et cherche à s'échapper, mais le pêcheur le saisit avec son crochet."

^a κρήνη is properly a spring from which the water has a free out-flow (Hom. Od. xvii. 205 ἐπὶ κρήνην ἀφίκοντο | τυκτὴν καλλίρροον, δθεν ὑδρεύοντο πολῖται ; x. 107 κρήνην καλλιρρέεθρον ; Hesiod, W. 595 κρήνης ἀενάον καὶ ἀπορρύτουν, ἢ τ' ἀθύλωτος) as opposed to a standing well, but the distinction is not very accurately observed. For poisoning or making undrinkable the evil-smelling poison of the hateful unguent and pollutes the sea. Him when he has done his deadly poison the ship takes on board again. But speedily the evil and unkindly odour first reaches the fishes in their chambers and their eyes are clouded and their head and limbs are heavy and they cannot remain in their hiding-places but rush in terror from the rocks. But the sea is yet more bitter for them : such bane is mingled with its waves. And heavy as it were with wine, drunk with the deadly fumes, they wheel every way but nowhere find a place free from the plague, and they rush furiously upon the nets, eager to break through. But there is no deliverance from their cruel doom nor any escape. With much rushing and leaping they toss in their agony and as they perish there runs over the sea a great panting —which for the wretched fishes is their way of lamentation. But the fishermen, rejoicing in their agonies, remain callously apart until silence reigns upon the sea and the fishes cease from their noise and grievous tumult, having breathed away their lamentable breath. And then the fishers draw forth an infinite crowd of dead, slain together by a common doom of destruction. As when men bring war upon their foes, eager to destroy and raze their city, and cease not to devise evil in their hearts but even poison with deadly poison the water of their wells :^a and

NEXT hear and mark, O lord of earth, that there is nothing impossible for men to do, either on mother earth or in the vasty gulf of the sea, but of a truth someone created men to be a race like unto the blessed gods, albeit he gave them inferior strength : ^a whether it was the son of Iapetus, Prometheus ^b of many devices, who made man in the likeness of the blessed ones, mingling earth with water, and anointed his heart with the anointing of the gods ; or whether we are born of the blood divine that flowed from the Titans ; ^c for there is nothing more excellent than men, apart from the gods : only to the immortals shall we give place. How many monster wild beasts of dauntless might doth man quench upon the mountains, how many tribes of birds that wheel in cloud and air doth he take captive, ^d though he be of lowly stature ! strength as doth the invincible Lamna^a? What valour burns in the heart of the Lion to be likened to that of the dread Hammer-head?^b Before the dread-eyed Seal^c the maned Bears^d on the land tremble and, when they meet them in battle, they are vanquished. Such are the beasts which have their business in the sea. But notwithstanding even for them the dauntless race of men has devised grievous woe, and they perish at the hands of fishermen, when these set themselves to do battle with the Sea-monsters. The manner of hunting these with its heavy labour I will tell. And do ye hearken graciously, O kings, Olympian bulwarks of the earth.

The Sea-monsters that are nurtured in the midst of the seas are very many in number and of exceeding size. And not often do they come up out of the brine, but by reason of their heaviness they keep the bottom of the sea below. And they rave for food with unceasing frenzy, being always anhungered and never abating the gluttony of their terrible maw: for what food shall be sufficient to fill the void of their belly or enough to satisfy and give a respite to their insatiable jaws? Moreover, they themselves also destroy one another, the mightier in valour slaying the weaker, and one for the other is food and feast. Often too they bring terror to ships when they meet them in the Iberian sea^e in the West, where chiefly, leaving the infinite water of the neighbouring Ocean,^f they roll upon their way, like unto ships of twenty oars.^a Often also they stray and come nigh the beach where the water is deep inshore^b: and there one may attack them.

For all the great beasts of the sea, save the Dog-fishes, travelling is heavy-limbed and not easy. For they neither see far nor do they travel over all the sea, burdened as they are with their vast limbs, but very tardily they roll upon their way. Wherefore also with all of them there travels a companion fish, dusky to the eye and long of body and with a thin tail : which conspicuously goes before to guide them and show them their path in the sea ; for which cause men call it the Guide.^c But to the Whale^d it is a companion that hath found wondrous favour, as guide at once and guard ; and it easily bringeth him whither he will. For that is the only fish that he follows, the ever-loyal comrade of a loyal friend. And it wheels about near him and close by the eyes of the Whale it extends its tail, which tells the monster everything—whether there is some prey to seize or whether some evil threatens nigh, or if there is a shallow depth ^a of sea which it were better to avoid. Even as if it had a voice, the tail declares all things to him truly, and the burden of the water obeys. For that fish is to the beast champion at once and ears and eye : by it the Whale hears, by it he sees, to it he entrusts the reins of his life for keeping. Even as a son lovingly entreats his aged father, by anxious care of his years repaying the price of his nurture,^b and zealously attends and cherishes him, weak now of limb and dim of eye, reaching him his arm in the street and himself in all works succouring him—sons ^c are a new strength to an aged sire : so that fish for love cherishes the monster of the brine, steering as it were a ship by the guiding helm.^d Surely it had blood akin to his from earliest birth or he took it of his own will and made it his companion. Thus neither valour nor beauty hath such profit as wisdom, and strength with unwisdom is vain. A little man of good counsel sinks or saves the man of might ; for even the invincible Whale with its unapproachable limbs takes for its friend a tiny fish. Therefore one should first capture that scouting Guide, entrapping it with might of hook and bait ; for while it lives thou shalt never overpower and conquer the monster, but when it is gone, his destruction will be swifter. For he no longer knows surely the paths of the violet brine nor knows to shun the evil that is at hand, but, even as a merchant vessel whose steersman has perished, he wanders idly, defenceless and helpless, wherever the grey water carries him, and is borne in darkling and unguessed ways, widowed of his helpful charioteer. Many a time in his wandering he runs aground on rock or beach : such darkness is spread upon his eyes. Thereupon with eager thoughts the fishers hasten to the labour of the hunt, praying to the blessed gods of whale-killing that they may capture the dread monster of Amphitrite.^a As when a strong company of foemen, having waited for midnight, stealthily approach their enemy and find by favour of Ares the sentinels asleep before the gates and fall upon them and overcome them : thereupon they haste confidently to the high city and the very citadel, carrying the weapon of fire, the doom of the city, even the brand that wrecks the well-builded walls : even so confidently do the fisher host haste after the beast, unguarded now that his pilot is slain. First they conjecture in their minds his weight and size ; and these are the signs that tell the measure of his limbs. If, as he rolls amid the waves of the sea, he rise a little above it, showing the top of his spine and the ridge of his neck, then verily he is a mighty beast and excellent : for not even the sea itself can easily support and carry him. But if some portion of his back also appears, that does not announce so great a weight : for feebler beasts travel a more buoyant path. For these monsters the line is fashioned of many strands of well-woven cord, as thick as the forestay of a ship, neither very large nor very small, and in length suitable to the prey. The well-wrought hook is rough and sharp with barbs projecting alternately on either side, strong enough to take a rock and pierce a cliff and with deadly curve as great as the gape of the beast can cover. A coiled chain is cast about the butt of the dark hook—a stout chain of beaten bronze to withstand the deadly violence of his teeth and the spears of his mouth. In the midst of the chain are set round wheels close together, to stay his wild struggles and prevent him from straight-way breaking the iron in his bloody agony, as he tosses in deadly pain, but let him roll and wheel in his fitful course. For fatal banquet they put upon the hook a portion of the black liver of a bull or a bull's shoulder suited to the jaws of the banqueter. To accompany the hunters, as it were for war, are sharpened many strong harpoons^a and stout tridents and bills and axes of heavy blade and other such weapons as are forged upon the noisy anvil. Swiftly they go on board their well-benched ships, silently nodding to one another as need may be, and set forth. With quiet oars they gently make white the sea, carefully avoiding any noise, lest the great Whale remark aught and dive into the depths for refuge, and the task of the fishers be undertaken in vain. But when they draw nigh to him and close with their task, then boldly from the prow they

^b Cf. Relation of a Voyage in the North Sea, . . . made in the years 1767 and 1768 by M. de Kerguelen Tremarec (Pinkerton's Voyages, vol. i. p. 790): "As these poor people [the Greenlanders] have but little wood and iron, they make use of the precaution of fastening to the middle launch for the giant beast the fatal snare. And when he espies the grievous banquet, he springs and disregards it not, obedient to his shameless belly,^a and rushing upon the hookèd death he seizes it ; and immediately the whetted hook enters within his wide throat and he is impaled upon the barbs. Then, roused by the wound, first, indignant, he shakes his deadly jaw against them and strives to break the brazen cord ; but his labour is vain. Then, next, in the anguish of fiery pain he dives swiftly into the nether gulfs of the sea. And speedily the fishers allow him all the length of the line ; for there is not in men strength enough to pull him up and to overcome the heavy monster against his will. For easily could he drag them to the bottom, benched ship and all together, when he set himself to rush. Straightway as he dives they let go with him into the water large skins ^b filled with human breath and fastened to the line. And he, in the agony of his pain, heeds not the hides but lightly drags them down, all unwilling and fain for the surface of the foamy sea. But when he comes to the bottom with labouring heart, he halts, greatly foaming in his distress. As some horse when it has accomplished its sweaty labour to the utmost goal, in a bloody foam grinds his teeth in the crooked bit, while the hot panting breath comes through his

of every harpoon which they throw the bladder of a sea-dog, that if the harpoon should not strike the fish or detach itself from it, it may float on the water, and be readily found again. This experiment was known to the fishermen of the Atlantic [sic] Ocean, for Opien in his Halieuticon speaks of it : lib. v. 177 : ‘They dart,’ says he, ‘large sacks blown up by the breath, and fastened to a cord, immediately at the fish, as it is about to plunge.’”

mouth : so, breathing hard, the Whale rests. But the skins allow him not, even if he would, to remain below but swiftly speed upward and leap forth from the sea, buoyed by the breath within them ; and a new contest arises for the Whale. Then first he makes a vain rush with his jaws, eager to defend himself against the hides which pull him up. But these fly upward and await him not, but flee like living things seeking escape. And he indignant rushes again to the innermost deep of the brine, and many a twist and turn he makes, now perforce, now of his own will, pulling and being pulled in turn. As when woodcutters ^a labour busily at the joint labour of the saw, when they haste to make a keel or other needful matter for mariners : both men in turn draw to them the rough edge of iron pressing on the wood and the row of its teeth is never turned in one path, but urged from either side it sings loudly as it saws and evermore is drawn the other way : even such is the contest between the hides and the deadly beast—he being dragged up, while they are urged the other way. Much bloody spume he discharges over the sea as he struggles in his pain, and his panting breath as he rages resounds under the sea, and the water bubbles and roars around ; thou wouldest say that all the blasts of Boreas were housed and hidden beneath the waves : so violently he pants in his fury. And round about many a swirling eddy the swelling waves make a hollow in the waters and the sea is divided in twain. As by the mouth of the

^a The Strait of Messina, Σικελικὸς πορθμός (Strabo 43), Siculum fretum (Plin. iii. 92), between Italy and Sicily, dividing the Tyrrhenian Sea on the N. from the Ionian Sea on the S. Here were localized the Scylla and Charybdis of Hom. Od. xii. 104 ff. Cf. Thuc. iv. 24; Strabo 268; Plin. iii. 87 In eo freto est scopulus Scylla, item Charybdis, mare verticosum, ambo clara saevitia.

^b Strabo 248 *ταῦτ' οὖν διανοηθεῖς (Πίνδαρος) τῷ παντὶ τόπῳ τούτῳ φησὶν ὑποκείσθαι τὸν Τυφῶνα· νῦν γε μὰν ταῦθ' ὑπὲρ Κύμας ἀλιερκέες δχθαι Σικελία τ' αὐτοῦ πιέζει στέρνα λαχνάεντα [= Pind. P. i. 17 ff.].*

Ionian and Tyrrhenian seas the dividing waters of the Strait ^a roll raging under the violent panting of Typhon ^b and dread straining swirls curve the swift wave and dark Charybdis circles round, drawn by her eddying tides : even so by the panting blasts of the Whale the space of the sea around is lashed and whirled about. Then should one of the whalers row his hollow skiff and come to land and make fast the line to a rock upon the shore and straightway return—even as a man makes fast a ship by cables from the stern.^c Now when the deadly beast is tired with his struggles and drunk with pain and his fierce heart is bent with weariness and the balance of hateful doom inclines, then first of all a skin comes to the surface, announcing the issue of victory and greatly uplifts the hearts of the fishers. Even as, when a herald ^d returns from dolorous war in white ^e raiment and with cheerful face, his friends exulting follow him, expecting straightway to hear favourable tidings, so do the fishers exult when they behold the hide, the messenger of good news, rising from below. And immediately other skins rise up

^a By means of the stern-cables (πρυμήσια) attached to a rock on shore. Hence the Homeric formulae (1) when a ship comes to land : ἐκ δ' εὐνᾶς (anchors) ἔβαλον, κατὰ δὲ πρυμήσι ἔδησαν (Hom. Il. i. 436); (2) when a ship puts to sea : πεῖσμα (cable) δ' ἔλυσαν ἀπὸ τρητοῦ λίθου (Hom. Od. xiii. 77); cf. Poll. x. 134.

^b Aesch. Ag. 638 ff. contrasts the messenger of bad news (ὅταν δ' ἀπευκτὰ πήματ' ἄγγελος πόλει στυγνῷ προσώπῳ πτωσίμου στρατοῦ φέρῃ) with the bringer of glad tidings (σωτηρίαν δὲ πραγμάτων εὐάγγελον | ἡκούτα πρὸς χαίρονταν εὐεστοῖ πόλειν).

^c The Greeks, like ourselves, associated white with gladness, black with mourning. Hence the boast of Pericles upon his death-bed : “Οὐδεὶς γάρ,” ἔφη, “δι’ ἐμὲ τῶν δυτῶν Ἀθηναίων μέλαν ιμάτιον περιεβάλετο” (Plut. Per. xxxviii.).

and emerge from the sea, dragging in their train the huge monster, and the deadly beast is hauled up all unwillingly, distraught in spirit with labour and wounds. Then the courage of the fishers is roused and with hasting blades they row their well-oared boats near. And much noise and much shouting resound upon the sea as they haste and exhort one another to the struggle. Thou wouldest say thou wert beholding the toil of men in war ; such valour rises in their hearts and there is such din and such desire for battle. Far away some goatherd hears their horrid noise, or some shepherd tending his woolly flock in the glens, or woodcutter felling the pine, or hunter slaying wild beasts, and astonished he draws near to sea and shore and standing on a cliff beholds the tremendous toil of the men in this warfare of the sea and the issue of the wondrous hunt, while quenchless lust of war in the water stirs the men. Then one brandishes in his hands the long-barbed trident, another the sharp-pointed lance, others carry the well-bent bill, another wields the two-edged axe. All toil, the hands of all are armed with mighty blade of iron, and close at hand they smite and wound the beast with sweeping blows. And he forgets his mighty valour and is no more able, for all his endeavour, to stay the hasting ships with his jaws, but with heavy sweep of flippers and with the end of his tail he ploughs up the waves of the deep and drives back the ships sternward and turns to naught the work of the oars and the valour of the men, even as a contrary wind that rolls the waves against the prow. The cries of the men resound as they set themselves to work, and all the sea is stained with the gory filth poured forth by his deadly wounds. The infinite water boils with the blood of the beast and the grey sea is reddened. As when in winter a river comes down from the hills of red earth into a billowy gulf and the blood-coloured mud is rolled down by the rush of the water, mingling with the eddying waves ; and afar the water is reddened by the ruddy dust and the sea is as if covered with blood : even so in that hour the gory waters are stained with the blood of the beast, rent amid the waves by the shafts of the fishermen. Then they draw and drop into his wounds a bitter stream of bilge-water ; and the salt mingling in his sores like fire kindles for him deadliest destruction. As when the fire of heaven smites with the lash of Zeus a bark that is traversing the sea, and the flaming onset that devours the ship is stirred and made yet fiercer by the sea mingling with the torches of heaven : even so his cruel wounds and pains are made more fierce by the cruel water of the putrid evil-smelling bilge. But when, overcome by the pains of many gashes, fate brings him at last to the gates of dismal death, then they take him in tow and joyfully haul him to the land ; and he is dragged all unwilling, pierced with many barbs as with nails and nodding as if heavy with wine in the issue of deathly doom. And the fishers, raising the loud paean of victory,^a while they speed the boat with their oars, make the sea resound, singing their shrill song to hastening blades. As when after the decision of a battle at sea the victors take in tow the ships of the vanquished and haste joyfully to bring to land the foemen who man the ships, shouting loud to the oarsmen the paean of victory in a fight at sea, while the others against their will sorrowfully follow their foe perforce: even so the fishers take in tow the dread monster of the brine and joyfully bring him ashore. But when he comes nigh the land, then destruction real and final rouses him, and he struggles and lashes the sea with his terrible fins, like a bird upon the well-built altar tossing in the dark struggle of death. Unhappy beast! verily many an effort he makes to reach the waves but the strength of his valour is undone and his limbs obey him not and panting terribly he is dragged to land: even as a merchant ship, broad and many-benched, which men draw forth from the sea and haul up^a on the dry land when winter comes, to rest from its seafaring toil, and heavy is the labour of the sailors: so they bring the mighty-limbed whale to land. And he fills all the beach with his unapproachable limbs as they lie, and he is stretched out dead, terrible to behold. Even when he is killed and laid upon the land one still dreads to approach his corpse of dread aspect and fears him when he is no more, shuddering even when he is gone at the mere teeth in his jaws. At last they take courage and gather^b about him in a body, gazing in astonishment at the ruins of the savage beast. Then some marvel at the deadly ranks of his jaws, even the dread and stubborn tusks, like javelins, arrayed in triple row with close-set points. Others feel the bronze-pierced wounds of the monster of many battles ; another gazes at his sharp spine bristling with terrible points ; others behold with wonder his tail, others his capacious belly and measureless head. And, looking on the fierce beast of the sea, one who has lingered more in landward haunts than among ships says among his comrades by his side : O Earth, dear mother, thou didst bear me and hast fed me with landward food, and in thy bosom let me die, when my destined day arrives ! (Be the Sea and the works thereof gracious^a unto me and on the dry land let me worship Poseidon !) And may no tiny bark speed me among the grievous waves nor let me scan the winds and the clouds in the air ! Not enough is the so great terror of the waves, not enough for men the terror of distressful seafaring and the woe that they endure, ever riding with the storm-winds of evil noise, nor enough for them to perish by a watery doom : beyond all these they still await such banqueters as these, and find burial without a tomb, glutting the cavern of a wild beast's throat. I fear her who breeds such woes.

* This is a parenthetical apology, an appeal to the Sea and the Sea-god not to be offended by the poet's preference for the land. Cf. C. i. 9, where the poet deprecates the offence of Phaethon and Apollo at his comparing Antoninus to the sons of Zeus. So in prose, Herod. ii. 45 καὶ περὶ μὲν τούτων τοσαῦτα ἡμῖν εἰποῦσι καὶ παρὰ τῶν θεῶν καὶ παρὰ τῶν ἥρωών εὑμενεῖν εἰη. So Tennyson, In Memoriam lxxix. 1 f. "More than my brothers are to me" [ix. 20]. Let this not vex thee, noble heart!" etc. A good example of the parenthetic apology is Pind. I. i. 1 ff. Μάτερ ἐμά, τὸ τεόν, χρύσασπι Θήβα, | πρᾶγμα καὶ ἀσχολίας ὑπέρτερον | θήσομαι—μή μοι κραναδ νεμεσάσαι | Δᾶλος—ἐν ᾧ κέχυμαι, where editors amazingly continue to punctuate with a full stop after θήσομαι.

^a The sense is exactly that of 339 supra χέρσῳ δὲ Ποσειδάωνα σέβοιμι and of ἔκαθεν δέ μοι ἥπιος εἴης here. He is willing to pay his homage to the Sea, but he wishes no closer acquaintance. Cf. Plato, Rep. 499 α τὰ δὲ κομψά τε καὶ ἐριστικὰ . . . πέρρωθεν ἀσπαζομένων, i.e. ordinary men look distantly upon the subtleties and quibbles of the sophist. One is reminded of C. S. Calverley's famous reply to Dr. Jenkyns, when, as C. S. Blayds, he was an undergraduate at Balliol. Dr. Jenkyns: "And with what feelings, Mr. Blayds, ought we to regard the Decalogue?" Blayds: "Master, with feelings of devotion mingled with awe!" Cf. Eurip. Hipp. 102 πρόσωθεν αὐτὴν (sc. Ἀφροδίτην) ἀγνὸς ὡν ἀσπάζομαι.

^b Cf. Hom. Il. xviii. 104 ἐτώσιον ἄχθος ἀρούρης; Od. xx. 379 αὐτῷς ἄχθος ἀρούρης.

^c The use of a gourd as a float is mentioned by Apostolides in his account, p. 45 f., of fishing for the Great Sea-perch (H. i. 142 n.). A strong line with a large hook is employed. Baited with small fishes, especially Saupes, this is cast in front of the Perch's retreat among the rocks. When the fish is hooked, it withdraws into its hole and, dilating its gill-covers, presses against the walls of its retreat in such a way that the fisher cannot pull it out. But "il mouille, le plus loin possible, en ligne droite, l'autre extrémité libre de la ligne au moyen d'une pierre et attache au milieu une gourde (κολοκύνθη) ou un grand morceau de liège, qui, tiré

Nay, O Sea, I greet thee—from the land,^a and—from afar—mayst thou be kind to me!

Such are the labours by which they slay those Sea-monsters which exceed in monstrous bulk of body, burdens^b of the sea. But those which are endowed with lesser limbs are caught by lesser sort of hunting and the weapons are suited to the prey: smaller the lines, smaller the jaw of the hook, scantier the food that baits the barbs, and in place of the skins of goats globes of dried gourds^c fastened to the line pull the body of the beast to the surface.

When fishermen encounter the whelps of the Lamna,^d many a time they merely undo the oar-thong,^e the strap which fastens the oar, and project par les deux bouts, se tire au dessous du niveau de la mer. Un ou deux jours après, si le cernier, pressé par la faim et fatigué de se tenir appuyé contre les parois de son nid, se relâche un peu, il est aussitôt tiré par la ligne qui tend à flotter. N'étant pas assez fort pour entraîner de nouveau le liège, il reste en dehors de son nid, et le pêcheur, avisé par la ligne qui flotte, vient le ramasser" (Apost. l.c.).

^b This refers to the simplest form of rowlock, a pin or thole (σκαλμός) in the gunwale to which the oar was fastened by a leatheren thong (τροπός, τροπωτήρ): Poll. i. 87 ὅθεν μὲν αἱ κώπαι ἐκδέδενται, σκαλμός· φῶ δὲ ἐκδέδενται, τροπωτήρ· καὶ τροπώσασθαι ναῦν. it in the waves. And when the Lamna espies it, she rushes and puts forth the strength of her jaws, and straightway her crooked teeth are entangled in the strap and are held fast as if in chains. Thereafter it is an easy task to kill the Lamna with blows of the iron trident.

Ravenous pre-eminently among the hateful Seamonsters and gluttonous are the monster tribes of the Dog-fishes^a; and they are pre-eminently insolent and proud and will fear nothing that they meet, having unbridled shamelessness ever swelling like a frenzy in their hearts. Often they rush upon the nets of the fishermen or attack their weels and destroy their fishy spoil, while fattening their own hearts. And a watchful fisherman may pierce them with the hook in the frenzy of their gluttony and land them along with the fishes, a pleasant spoil of his fishing.

For the Seal no hooks are fashioned nor any three-pronged spear which could capture it : for exceeding hard is the hide which it has upon its limbs as a mighty hedge. But when the fishermen have unwittingly enclosed a seal among the fishes in their well-woven nets, then there is swift labour and haste to pull the nets ashore. For no nets, even if there are very many at hand, would stay the raging seal, but with its violence and sharp claws it will easily break them and rush away and prove a succour to the pent-up fishes but a great grief to the hearts of the fishermen. But if betimes they bring it near the land, there with trident and mighty clubs and stout spears they smite it on the temples^b and kill

^b The main points of vv. 394-415, but rather differently combined, are found in two accounts: (1) Plin. ix. 35 f. it : since destruction comes most swiftly upon seals when they are smitten on the head.

Moreover, the Turtles^a also very often destroy the spoil of the fishermen when they fall in with it and become a plague to the men. To capture^b it is the easiest task of all for a man who is courageous and of fearless soul. For if he leap into the waves and turn the stony turtle on its back upon its shell, no more can it avoid doom, however much it try, but it floats on the surface buoyantly, struggling with its feet in its desire for the sea ; and laughter seizes the fishermen. And sometimes they smite it with blows of iron, otherwhiles they deal with it by towing it with ropes. And as when a boy in childish frolic takes a rough mountain-roaming Tortoise and turns it over and it lies upon its back and is very eager to reach the ground, waving its wrinkled feet and wriggling furiously its crooked knees in its distress, and laughter seizes all who behold : even so its kindred beast of the sea floats on its back in the brine, the sport of the fishermen.

And often it comes up to the dry land and by the

^a For the Dolphin in Greek religion and mythology see Hermann Usener, Die Sintflutsagen (Bonn, 1899), chap. v.

^b We take the sense of ἀπότροπος here to be ἀπὸ τρόπου, “contra morem consuetudinemque civilem” (Cic. De offic. i. 41. 148); cf. [Phocylid.] 182 μηδὲ κασιγνήτης ἐσ ἀπότροπον ἐλθέμεν εὐνήν. So εἴναι παράτροποι Pind. P. ii. 35. Otherwise it may mean “abominable.” But the word needs more careful consideration than it has yet received. It is curious that Aristotle speaks of hunting the Dolphin without a hint of anything unusual: A. 533 b 9 δ συμβαίνει καὶ ἐπὶ τῆς τῶν δελφίνων θήρας ὅταν γὰρ ἀθρῷως περικυκλώσωσι τοῖς μονοξύλοις (canoes), ψοφοῦντες ἐξ αὐτῶν ἐν τῇ θαλάττῃ ἀθρους ποιοῦσιν ἐξοκέλλειν φεύγοντας εἰς τὴν γῆν καὶ λαυβάνουσιν rays of the sun its scales are burnt about it and it carries but withered limbs back to the sea and the dark wave receives it no more for all its eagerness but carries and rolls it aloft while it yearns for the bottom of the sea. And fishermen espying it very easily and gladly overcome it.

The hunting of Dolphins^a is immoral^b and that man can no more draw nigh the gods as a welcome sacrificer nor touch their altars with clean hands but pollutes those who share the same roof with him, whoso willingly devises destruction for Dolphins. For equally with human slaughter the gods abhor the deathly doom of the monarchs of the deep^c; for like thoughts with men have the attendants of the god of the booming sea: wherefore also they practise love of their offspring^d and are very friendly one to another. Behold now what manner of happy hunting the Dolphins kindly to men array against the fishes in the island of Euboea^e amid the Aegean waves. For when the fishers hasten to the toil of ὑπὸ τοῦ ψύφου καρηβαρῶντας. So Ael. i. 18 δταν δὲ ἀλιεὺς ή τρώσῃ τὸν παῖδα αὐτῆς τῇ τριαίνῃ ή τῇ ἀκίδῃ βάλῃ—ή μὲν ἀκὶς τὰ ἄνω τέτρηται, καὶ ἐνῆπται σχοῖνος μακρὰ αὐτῇ, οἱ δὲ δγκοι εἰσδύντες ἔχονται τοῦ θηρός—καὶ ἔως μὲν ἀλγῶν ἔτι ρώμης ὁ δελφίς ὁ τραυματίας μετεῖληχεν, χαλῷ ὁ θηρατής τὴν σχοῖνον, . . . δταν δὲ αἰσθηται καμύντα καὶ πως παρειμένον ἐκ τοῦ τραύματος, ἡσυχῇ παρ' αὐτὴν ἀγει τὴν ναῦν καὶ ἔχει τὴν ἀγραν.

^c Cf. infra 441 n. ἡγητήρ, like Latin dux, a poetical synonym for king or emperor.

^a Ael. i. 18 δελφίς δὲ ἄρα θῆλυς φιλοτεκνότατος ἐs τὰ ἔσχατα ξῶων ἔστι. Cf. v. 6, x. 8; Phil. 86; Plin. ix. 21 gestant fetus infantia infirmos. Quin et adultos diu comitantur magna erga partum caritate.

^b Oppian's story is paraphrased by Ael. ii. 8. A similar story is told by Plin. ix. 29 ff. who also refers to a similar practice "in Iasio sinu" (in Caria). The fish captured is in Pliny the Grey Mullet (mugil).

^a The word ὁμοκλή, “call,” is used in the vaguest way. The schol. here interprets ἀπειλήν, λαμπηδόνα : in H. i. 152 ἀπειλήν, in H. iv. 14 ἀπειλήν, ὁργήν. Oppian misunderstands, as does Aelian, the use of the lantern (not mentioned by Pliny) which is not to frighten, but to attract. Apostolides, p. 40, gives the following account of the mode of fishing for the Gar-fish (Belone acus) practised in the Sporades N. of Euboea : “ Pendant les nuits les plus obscures du mois d’Octobre, aussitôt après l’arrivée des poissons, les bateaux quittent leur mouillage le soir et se rendent au large. Arrivés à l’endroit désigné les pêcheurs amènent les voiles et marchent lentement à la rame en examinant la mer de tous côtés. Il est facile de se rendre compte de la présence du poisson en écoutant le bruit que font les dauphins qui le poursuivent à la surface de l’eau. Alors, les pêcheurs allument un grand feu avec du bois résineux sur une espèce de gril en fer, qu’ils fixent à la proue du navire (πυροφάνι et πυριά vulg.). Les poissons attirés par la lueur accourent vers le bateau comme pour y chercher un abri contre l’ennemi [i.e., the Dolphins] qui ne cesse de les décimer. Les evening fishing, carrying to the fishes the menace ^a of fire, even the swift gleam of the brazen lantern,^b the Dolphins attend them, speeding the slaughter of their common prey. Then the fishes in terror turn away and seek escape, but the Dolphins from the outer sea rush together upon them and frighten them and, when they would fain turn to the deep sea, they drive them forth towards the unfriendly land, leaping at them ever and again, even as dogs chasing the wild beast for the hunters and answering bark with bark. And when the fishes flee close to the land, the fishermen easily smite them with the well-pronged trident. And there is no way of escape for them, but they dance about in the sea, driven by the fire and by the Dolphins, the kings of the sea.^c But when the work of capture is pêcheurs ne commence pas aussitôt la pêche, mais ils continuent à ramer lentement, sans bruit, de manière à faire tourner, sur place, le bateau quinze ou vingt fois sur lui-même. Cette opération . . . a pour but, je crois, de réfléter la lumière de tous les côtés de l'horizon, pour attirer les poissons qui se trouveraient à l'arrière du bateau, et qui, par conséquent, ne l'auraient pas vue. Les poissons réunis autour du bateau ne le quittent presque plus, ils y restent, tournant même avec lui quand les pêcheurs le font tourner. Cela fait, on dirige le bateau lentement, à l'aviron, vers la terre, où il est suivi par les nombreuses bandes de Bélones. On arrive ainsi à la côte. Là on prend des précautions pour que le bateau ne touche terre, le moindre choc faisant dégouvrir aussitôt les poissons. On l'arrête à une distance d'un ou de deux mètres, et, laissant les rames, on prend les haveneaux en main, et l'on commence à envelopper les poissons des deux côtés du bateau."

^a So Plin. ix. 32 (we give Philemon Holland's engaging version) "But after this service perfourmed, the Dolphins retire not presently into the deepe again, from whence they were called, but stay untill the morrow, as if they knew verie well that they had so carried themselves as that they deserved a better reward than one daies refection and victuals: and therefore contented they are not and satisfied, unlesse to their fish they have some sope and crummes of bread given them soaked in wine, and that their bellies full."

^b Arion of Methymna in Lesbos lived at the court of Periander tyrant of Corinth (625–585 B.C.). Having amassed great wealth in Italy and Sicily he wished to return to Corinth. At Tarentum he hired a boat from some Corinthians. On the voyage the men, wishing to get his money, conspired to throw him overboard. Arion offered them all his wealth if they wo'd spare his life. They gave happily accomplished, then the Dolphins draw near and ask the guerdon of their friendship, even their allotted portion of the spoil.^a And the fishers deny them not, but gladly give them a share of their successful fishing ; for if a man sin against them in his arrogance, no more are the Dolphins his helpers in fishing.

One has heard, moreover, of the feat famous of old of the Lesbian minstrel,^b how riding on the back of a Dolphin he crossed the black waves while he sat fearless of heart and singing, and so escaped death from the pirates, and reached the land of Taenarus on the shores of the Laconians. And one knows, methinks, by hearsay the love of the Libyan boy^c whom as he herded his sheep a Dolphin loved with a burning love and played with him beside the shores and for delight in his shrill pipe^d was fain to live among the very sheep and to forsake the sea and

him the choice either to kill himself or to jump into the sea. He asked to be allowed to don his minstrel's dress and sing to them. This granted, he stood on the deck and sang, and then jumped into the sea, when a Dolphin took him on its back and carried him ashore at Taenarus in Laconia. Herod. i. 24; Pausan. iii. 25. ^a The reference is to Por(d)oselene on an island of the same name near Lesbos (Strabo 618). Ael. ii. 6 tells the story somewhat differently from Oppian, and omitting the death of the boy and the Dolphin (see note on 518 infra): λέγει δὲ καὶ Βυζάντιος ἀνήρ, Λεωνίδης δνομα, ἴδειν αὐτὸς παρὰ τὴν Αἰολίδα πλέων ἐν τῇ καλούμενῃ Ποροσελήνῃ πόλει δελφῖνα ἡθάδα καὶ ἐν λιμένι τῷ ἐκείνων οἰκοῦντα κτλ.; cf. come to the woods. Nay, nor has all Aeolis^a forgotten the love of a youth—not long ago but in our own generation—how a Dolphin once loved an island boy and in the island it dwelt and ever haunted the haven where ships lay at anchor, even as if it were a townsman and refused to leave its comrade, but abode there and made that its house from the time that it was little till it was a grown cub, like a little child nurtured in the ways of the boy. But when they came to the fullness of vigorous youth, then the boy excelled among the youths and the Dolphin in the sea was more excellent in swiftness than all others. Then there was a marvel strange beyond speech or thought for strangers and indwellers to behold. And report stirred many to hasten to see the wondrous sight, a youth and a Dolphin growing up in comradeship, and day by day beside the shore were many gatherings of those who rushed to gaze upon the mighty marvel. Then the youth would embark in his boat and row in front of the embayed haven and would call it, shouting the name whereby he had named it even from earliest birth. And the Dolphin, like an arrow, when it heard the call of the boy, would speed swiftly and come close to the beloved boat, fawning with its tail and proudly lifting up its head fain to touch the boy. And he would gently caress it with his hands, lovingly greeting his comrade, while it would be eager to come right into the boat beside the boy.

But when he dived lightly into the brine, it would swim near the youth, its side right by his side and its cheek close by his and touching head with head. Thou wouldest have said that in its love the Dolphin was fain to kiss and embrace the youth : in such close companionship it swam. But when he came near the shore, straightway the youth would lay his hand upon its neck and mount on its wet back. And gladly and with understanding it would receive the boy upon its back and would go where the will of the youth drove it, whether over the wide sea afar he commanded it to travel or merely to traverse the space of the haven or to approach the land : it obeyed every behest. No colt for its rider is so tender of mouth and so obedient to the curved bit ; no dog trained to the bidding of the hunter is so obedient to follow where he leads ; nay, nor any servants are so obedient, when their master bids, to do his will willingly, as that friendly Dolphin was obedient to the bidding of the youth, without yoke-strap or constraining bridle. And not himself alone would it carry but it would obey any other whom his master bade it and carry him on its back, refusing no labour in its love. Such was its friendship for the boy while he lived ; but when death took him, first like one sorrowing the Dolphin visited the shores in quest of the companion of its youth : you would have said you heard the veritable voice of a mourner —such helpless grief was upon it. And no more, though they called it often, would it hearken to the island townsmen nor would it accept food when offered it, and very soon it vanished from that sea and none marked it any more and it no more visited the place. Doubtless sorrow for the youth that was gone killed it, and with its dead comrade it had been fain to die.

But notwithstanding, although the Dolphins so excel in gentleness and though they have a heart so much at one with men, the overweening Thracians and those who dwell in the city of Byzas ^a hunt them with iron-hearted devices—surely wicked men and sinful ! who would not spare their children or their fathers and would lightly slay their brothers born. And this is the manner of their unpleasant hunting. The mother Dolphin—a mother to her sorrow—is closely attended by her twin brood,^b like unto boys of tender age. Now against these the cruel Thracians array their attack, equipping a light boat for the sinful labour of their hunt. The young Dolphins, when they see the speeding bark before them, remain still and look not to flight, not dreaming that any guile or ill would come upon them from men, but fawn on them as on kindly comrades with delight, rejoicing as they meet their own destruction. Then the fishers strike swiftly the hurled trident which they call a harpoon, most deadly weapon of the hunt, and smite one of the young Dolphins with unthought of woe. And shrinking back in the bitter anguish of its pain, it straightway dives within the nether brine, racked with torture and grievous agony. And the fishers do not hale it up by force—else would they be undertaking to no purpose a vain and empty work of hunting—but as it rushes, they let the long line go with it and urge on the boat with their oars, following the path of the fleeing Dolphin. But when it is weary and in evil case with grievous pains and struggles on the barbs of iron, then being faint it comes to the surface, its strong limbs weary, raised by the buoyant waves, gasping its last. And the mother never leaves it but always follows with it in its distress and when it rises from the depths, like one who grieves and mourns terribly. You would say you were beholding the mourning of a mother when her city is sacked by the foe and her children are haled away perforce as the spoil of the spear. Even so she in sore grief circles about her wounded child as if she herself were suffering and wounded by the iron. Her other child she falls upon to send it from her path and urgently drives it away : "Flee, my child ! for men are foes, no longer friends to us, but they prepare against us iron and capture : now even against the Dolphins they array war, sinning against the truce of the immortal gods and against the concord which formerly we made with one another." So, voiceless though she be, she speaks to her children. And one she turns away to flee afar ; but the other, suffering with it in its cruel suffering, she attends close to the very boat and forsakes it not ; nor could one drive away the mother if he tried either by striking her or by any other form of terror, but along with the child, when it is haled up the unhappy mother is haled up also, till she comes into the hands of the foe. Unkind and surely greatly sinful, these neither have pity upon her when they see her distress nor bend their heart of iron, but, smiting her also with stroke of brazen harpoons, they slay child and mother together in a common doom : slay her not unwilling to be slain, since over her dead child the mother wittingly and willingly meets her death. As when a snake ^a chances upon the young brood of a swallow under the eaves and approaches them : and them he slays and seizes within his teeth, and the mother first circles about distraught, pitifully crying her lament for their slaying ; but when she sees her children perished, no more she seeks escape from destruction but flutters under the very jaws of the serpent, until the doom that slew the children overtakes the mother bird : even so also with the young Dolphin perishes the mother, coming a willing prey into the hands of the fishermen.

As for the Testacean ^b tribes which crawl in the sea, report tells that all these in due cycle are full of flesh when the moon ^c is waxing and inhabit a rich dwelling, but when she wanes, again they become more meagre and wrinkled of limb : such compelling force resides in them. Of these men gather some from the sand with their hands, diving under the sea ; others they pull from the rocks to which they stubbornly cling ; yet others the waves cast up on the very shores or in trenches digged in the sand.

The Purple-shells ^d again among Shell-fish are eminently gluttonous,^e and by gluttony is the true manner of their capture. Small weels ^f like baskets

H. iii. p. 111 "Another dreaded enemy [of the Oyster] is the 'whelk,' a term which includes Purpura lapillus, Murex erinaceus, Buccinum undatum, and probably also Nassa reticulata. All these species perforate the shell with the end of their radula, and then suck out the contents through the neatly-drilled hole"; ibid. p. 60 "Besides the dangers to which they are exposed from other enemies, many of the weaker forms of Mollusca fall a prey to their own brethren. . . . Purpura lapillus prefers Mytilus edulis to any other food, piercing the shell in about two days' time by its powerful radula, which it appears to employ are made with close-set rushes, and the fishers gather and place in them Spiral-shells and Clams together. Now when the Purple-fishes draw near, drunk with the lust of food, they put forth from within their chamber their long tongue,^a which is thin and sharp, and stretch it through the rushes, in quest of food and fatal feast they find. For the tongue, fixed in the close-set rushes, swells and is straitened by the mesh of withes and cannot any more draw back if it try but remains stretched in pain, until the fishers land the shell-fish while intent upon their tongue, bringing a colour most beautiful for purple cloths.

Than the task of the Sponge-cutters ^b I declare that there is none worse nor any work more woeful for men. These, when they prepare themselves for their labour, use more meagre food and drink and indulge themselves with sleep ^c unfitting fishermen. As when a man prepares himself for the tuneful contest—one who hath Phoebus' boast of lyric song—and he studies all care and every way takes heed, nursing for the games the melody of his clear voice: so do they zealously take all watchful care that their breath may abide unscathed when they go down into the depths and that they may recover from past toil. But when they adventure to accomplish their mighty task, they make their vows to the blessed gods who rule the deep sea and pray that they ward from them all hurt from the monsters of the deep and that no harm may meet them in the sea. And if they see a Beauty-fish,^a then great courage comes into their hearts ; for where these range there never yet hath any dread Sea-monster appeared nor noxious beast nor hurtful thing of the sea but always they delight in clean and harmless paths : wherefore also men have named it the Holy Fish. Rejoicing in it they hasten to their labours. A man is girt with a long rope above his waist and, using both hands, in one he grasps a heavy mass of lead and in his right hand he holds a sharp bill, while in the jaws of his mouth he keeps white oil.^b Standing upon the prow he scans the waves of the sea, p^ondering his heavy task and the infinite water. His comrades incite and stir him to his work with encouraging words, even as a man skilled in foot-racing when he stands upon his mark. But when he takes heart of courage, he leaps into the eddying waves and as he springs the force of the heavy grey lead drags him down. Now when he arrives at the bottom, he spits out the oil, and it shines brightly and the gleam mingles with the water, even as a beacon showing its eye in the darkness of the night. Approaching the rocks ^c he sees the Sponges which

 δὴ τι χαλεπώτερον ἀποσπᾶται, ἀν μὴ γένηται λαθραῖς ἡ κίνησις, ὡς φασιν; cf. Plut. Mor. 980 c; Plin. ix. 148 intellectum inesse his apparel quia, ubi avulsorem sensere, contractae multo difficilius abstrahuntur.

^b The best commentary on all this passage is Plin. ix. 152 f. Cum caniculis (Dog-fishes) atrox dimicatio. Inguina et calces omnemque candorem corporum [Ael. xv. 11 says that for this reason divers blacken the soles of their feet and the palms of their hands] appetunt. Salus una in adversas eundi ultroque terrendi. Pavet enim hominem aequa ac terret, et sors aequa in gurgite. Ut ad summa aquae ventum est, ibi periculum anceps adempta ratione contra eundi dum conetur emergere, et salus omnis in sociis. Funem illi religatum ab grow on the ledges of the bottom, fixed fast to the rocks ; and report tells that they have breath ^a in them, even as other things that grow upon the sounding rocks. Straightway rushing upon them with the bill in his stout hand, like a mower, he cuts the body of the Sponges, and he loiters not, but quickly shakes the rope,^b signalling to his comrades to pull him up swiftly. For hateful blood ^c is sprinkled straightway from the Sponges and rolls about the man, and many a times the grievous fluid, clinging to his nostrils, chokes the man with its noisome breath. Therefore swift as thought he is pulled to the surface ; and beholding him escaped from the sea one would rejoice at once and grieve and pity : so much are his weak members relaxed and his limbs unstrung with fear and distressful labour. Often when the sponge-cutter has leapt into the deep waters of the sea and won his loathly and unkindly spoil, he comes up no more, unhappy man, having encountered some huge and hideous beast.^d Shaking repeatedly the rope he bids his comrades pull him up. And the mighty Sea-monster umeris eius trahunt. Hunc dimicans, ut sit periculi signum, laeva quatit, dextera apprehenso stilo in pugna est. Modicus alias tractatus : ut prope carinam ventum est, nisi praeceleri vi repente rapiunt, absumi spectant. Ac saepe iam subducti e manibus auferuntur, si non trahentium opem conglobato corpore in pilae modum ipsi adiuvere. Protendunt quidem tridentes alii, sed monstro sollertia est navigium subeundi atque ita e tuto proeliandi. Omnis ergo cura ad speculandum hoc malum insumitur.

COLLUTHUS

The rape of Helen

INTRODUCTION

I. THE LIFE OF COLLUTHUS

FOR the life of Colluthus we have the following authorities :

1. Suidas s.v. Κόλουθος “of Lycopolis in the Thebais [in Egypt: Ptolemy iv. 5. 62, Strabo 812], epic poet, who lived [or ‘flourished,’ γεγονώς] in the times of the emperor Anastasius [i.e. Anastasius I., emperor 491–518], wrote Calydoniaca in six books, and Encomia in epic verse, and Persica.” So Eudocia (Villoisin, Anecd. Gr. i. p. 271).

2. A Life of Colluthus in cod. Ambrosianus Q 5 sup.: “Coluthus of Lycopolis in the Thebais, epic poet, lived, according to Suidas, in the time of Anastasius, surnamed Brachinūs, who succeeded Zeno as emperor in Constantinople, and after whom reigned Justinus the Thracian, after whom again the emperor was divus (ὁ θεῖος) Justinianus, who delivered Italy from the servitude of the Goths through Belisarius — Justinian being the nephew of Justinus — a little over a thousand years ago. He wrote Calydoniaca in epic verse in six books and Encomia and Persica. To him is ascribed also the present poem, the Rape of Helen, a poem familiar and well known in Apulia, where also the poetry of the Homeric Quintus [the Post-Homerica—τῶν μεθ' Ὀμηρον λόγοι of Q. Smyrnaeus or Calaber] was first discovered in the temple of St. Nicolas of Cassuli [Casoli] outside Hydrumtum [Otranto] and which its recoverer, the sainted Bessarion, archbishop of Nicaea, cardinal-bishop of Tusculum [Frascati], communicated to all concerned. And this also which was hidden, shall now be public property."

Notes.—(1) Zeno was emperor of the East at Constantinople from A.D. 474 to 491. He was succeeded by Anastasius I. who reigned 491–518. He in turn was succeeded by Justinus I. who reigned 518–527. He is called "the Thracian" because he was a native of Thrace. He again was succeeded by his nephew Justinian who reigned 527–565. For Belisarius see Gibbon, chap. xli.

(2) Bessarion (1395?–1472), a native of Trapezus (Trebizond), was a pupil of Plethon in the Peloponnese, became Cardinal and Patriarch of Constantinople, died in 1472 at Ravenna. In 1446 the Pope committed to him the oversight of the Greek monasteries of the Basilian Order to which, before leaving the East, Bessarion belonged.¹ The Italian monasteries of this Order were in the South of Italy. This circumstance led in 1450 to the discovery by Bessarion in the monastery of St. Nicola di Casoli (close to Otranto in Calabria), destroyed by the Turks in 1480, of various MSS. including Quintus Smyrnaeus (hence called Calaber) and Colluthus. He bequeathed his MSS. to Venice, where they now form part of the library of St. Mark, founded by Bessarion in 1468.

(3) The Hypothesis preserved in Parisinus 2764 adds nothing to (2).

INTRODUCTION

II. THE TEXT

The best ms. of Colluthus is—

M = codex Mutinensis, now Parisinus suppl. graec.

388. Hall, Companion to Classical Texts, p. 278, says it "was never at Modena but was brought by the French in the Napoleonic wars at the beginning of the 19th century from somewhere in North Italy."

It is dated Xth or XIth century.

This ms. was first used by I. Bekker in his edition of Colluthus, impensis G. Reimeri, Berlin 1816.

The only critical edition before that of Bekker was that of John Daniel van Lennep, Leovardiae 1747, which was founded on collations (given him by D'Orville, Ruhnken, Valckenaer) of six mss.

V = Vossianus, a collation of which is in the library at Leyden; probably to be identified with Palatinus 319.

P = Parisinus 2764.

Q = Parisinus 2600.

A = Ambrosianus Q 5 sup.

L = Laurentianus xxxi. 27.

R = Hauniensis 60 (once belonging to Elias Putsch, then to J. A. Fabricius, then to H. S. Reimar).

All these are probably derived from Bessarion's ms.

Other late mss. are :

Neapolitanus ii. F 17.

Paris. suppl. 109.

Marcianus viii. 1.

INTRODUCTION

Annot. in Col., Frankfort, 1614. V. E. Loescheri Lect. Coluth. Liber singularis, Wittenberg, 1724. Col. Hel. Rapt. graece, ap. Janss. Waesbergios, Amsterdam, 1735. Col. Rapt. Hel. recens. ad fidem codd. MSS. ac variantes lectiones et notas adjecit Jo. Dan. a Lennep, Leovardiae (Leeuwarden), 1747.

Col. Rapt. Hel. gr. et lat. Accedit metrica interpretatio italica Aut. Mar. Salvini, nunc primum edita. Recens. var. codd., MSS. lect. et select. annotat. adjec. Ang. Mar. Bandinius, Florence 1765. Apart from the translation in Italian this is simply van Lennep. Bandinius not merely reprints Lennep's text, but, without acknowledgement, reproduces his Latin version, his notes, and even his preface (translated into Italian). Cf. Buhle's remarks on Bandini's Aratus.

Another ed. entirely founded on Lennep is Col. Lycop. Theb. de Rapt. Hel. libellus: ex graec. in latina carmina conversus, versionibus, variantibus, et animadversionibus illustratus opera et studio Philippi Scio a S^o Michaele. Madrid 1770, which however, contains, besides a trans. in Latin verse, a rendering in Spanish verse by Antonio Garcia (see below—Translations).

Col. Rapt. Hel., curante Theoph. Christ. Harles, Nuremberg, 1776, likewise entirely founded on Lennep.

In 1816 appeared Col. Rapt. Hel. ex recensione Immanuel. Bekkeri, Berlin 1816. In addition to the mss. of Lennep, Bekker had a collation of the Mutinensis (containing seven hitherto unpublished lines) and cod. Gothanus.

In 1823 appeared the elaborate edition of A. Stanislas Julien, Paris 1823. This handsome volume contains a revised text, translation in French prose, a new Latin prose trans., a commentary, index verborum, etc., translations in English verse, Italian verse, Spanish verse, and German prose (see below Translations) and facsimiles of two mss., Parisinus 2764 and Parisinus 2600.

THE RAPE OF HELEN

Ye Nymphs of Troy, children of the river Xanthus,^a who oft-times leave on your father's sands the snoods that bind your tresses and the sacred toys of your hands, and array you for the dance on Ida,^b come hither, leaving the sounding river, and declare to me the counsel of the herdsman judge^c: say whence from the hills he came, sailing the unaccustomed deep, albeit ignorant of the business of the sea; and what was the occasion of the ships that were the spring of woe, that a cowherd should stir heaven and earth together; and what was the primeval beginning of the feud, that herdsmen should deal judgement to immortals: what was the suit: whence heard he the name of the Argive nymph^d? For ye came yourselves and beheld, beneath the three-peaked cliff of Idaean Phalacra,^e Paris sitting on his shepherd seat and the queen of the Graces, even Aphrodite, glorying. So among the high-peaked hills of the Haemonians,^f the marriage song of Peleus was being sung while, at the bidding of Zeus, Ganymede^g poured the wine. And all the race of the gods hastened to do honour to the white-

Out of the land of Melisseus,^c from fragrant Helicon, Apollo came leading the clear-voiced choir of the Muses. On either side, fluttering with golden locks, the unshorn cluster of his hair was buffeted by the west wind. And after him followed Hera, sister of Zeus; nor did the queen of harmony herself, even Aphrodite, loiter in coming to the groves of the Centaur.^d Came also Persuasion,^e having fashioned a bridal wreath, carrying the quiver of archer Eros. And Athena put off her mighty helmet from her brow and followed to the marriage, albeit of marriage she was untaught. Nor did Leto's daughter Artemis, sister of Apollo, disdain to come, goddess of the wilds though she was. And iron Ares, even as, helmetless nor lifting warlike spear, he comes into the house of Hephaestus, in such wise without breast-plate and without whetted sword danced smilingly. But Strife did Cheiron leave unhonoured: Cheiron did not regard her and Peleus heeded her not.

And as some heifer wanders from the pasture in the glen and roams in the lonely brush, smitten by the bloody gadfly, the goad of kine: so Strife,^f overcome by the pangs of angry jealousy, wandered in search of a way to disturb the banquet of the gods. And often would she leap up from her chair, set with precious stones, and anon sit down again. She smote with her hand the bosom of the earth and heeded not the rock. Fain would she unbar the bolts of the darksome hollows and rouse the Titans^a from the nether pit and destroy the heaven the seat of Zeus, who rules on high. Fain would she brandish the roaring thunderbolt of fire, yet gave way, for all her age, to Hephaestus, keeper of quenchless fire and of iron. And she thought to rouse the heavy-clashing din of shields, if haply they might leap up in terror at the noise. But from her later crafty counsel, too, she withdrew in fear of iron Ares, the shielded warrior.

And now she bethought her of the golden apples of the Hesperides.^b Thence Strife took the fruit that should be the harbinger of war, even the apple,^c and devised the scheme of signal woes. Whirling her arm she hurled into the banquet the primal seed of turmoil and disturbed the choir of goddesses. Hera, glorying to be the spouse and to share the bed of Zeus, rose up amazed, and would fain have seized it. And Cypris,^d as being more excellent than all, desired to have the apple, for that it is the treasure of the Loves. But Hera would not give it up and Athena would not yield. And Zeus, seeing the quarrel of the goddesses, and calling his son Hermaon,^e who sat below his throne, addressed him thus :

“ If haply, my son, thou hast heard^f of a son of Priam, one Paris, the splendid youth, who tends his herds on the hills of Troy, give to him the apple ; and bid him judge the goddesses' meeting brows and orbèd eyes. And let her that is preferred have the famous fruit to carry away as the prize of the fairer and ornament of the Loves."

So the father, the son of Cronus, commanded Hermaon. And he hearkened to the bidding of his father and led the goddesses upon the way and failed not to heed. And every goddess sought to make her beauty more desirable and fair. Cypris of crafty counsels unfolded her snood and undid the fragrant clasp of her hair and wreathed with gold her locks, with gold her flowing tresses. And she saw her children the Loves and called to them.

"The contest is at hand, dear children! embrace your mother that nursed you. To-day it is beauty of face that judges me. I fear to whom this herdsman will award the apple. Hera they call the holy nurse of the Graces, and they say that she wields sovereignty and holds the sceptre. And Athena they ever call the queen of battles. I only, Cypris, am an unwarlike goddess. I have no queenship of the gods, wield no warlike spear, nor draw the bow. But wherefore am I so sore afraid, when for spear I have, as it were, a swift lance, the honeyed girdle of the Loves! I have my girdle, I ply my goad, I raise my bow: even that girdle, whence women catch the sting of my desire, and travail often-times, but not unto death."

So spake Cypris of the rosy fingers and followed. And the wandering Loves heard the dear bidding of their mother and hasted after their nurse.

Now they had just passed over the summit of the hill of Ida, where under a rock-crowned cliff's height young Paris herded his father's flocks. On either side the streams of the mountain torrent he tended his herds, numbering apart the herd of thronging bulls, apart measuring the droves of feeding flocks. And behind him hung floating the hide of a mountain goat, that reached right to his thighs. But his herdsman's crook, driver of kine, was laid aside: for so, walking mincingly in his accustomed ways, he pursued the shrill minstrelsy of his pipe's rustic reeds. Often as he sang in his shepherd's shieling he would forget his bulls and heed no more his sheep. Hence with his pipe, in the fair haunts of shepherds, he was making dear music to Pan and to Hermaon. The dogs bayed not, and the bull did not bellow. Only windy Echo^a with her untutored cry, answered his voice from Ida's hills; and the bulls upon the green grass, when they had eaten their fill, lay down and rested on their heavy flanks.

So as he made shrill music under the high-roofed canopy of trees, he beheld from afar the messenger Hermaon. And in fear he leapt up and sought to shun the eye of the gods. He leaned against an oak his choir of musical reeds and checked his lay that had not yet laboured much. And to him in his fear wondrous Hermes spake thus:

“Fling away thy milking-pail and leave thy fair flocks and come hither and give decision as judge of the goddesses of heaven. Come hither and decide which is the more excellent beauty of face, and to the fairer give this apple's lovely fruit.”

So he cried. And Paris bent a gentle eye and quietly essayed to judge the beauty of each. He looked at the light of their grey eyes, he looked on the neck arrayed with gold, he marked the bravery of each ; the shape of the heel behind, yea and the soles of their feet. But, before he gave judgement, Athena took him, smiling, by the hand and spake to Alexander^a thus :

“ Come hither, son of Priam ! leave the spouse of Zeus and heed not Aphrodite, queen of the bridal bower, but praise thou Athena who aids the prowess of men. They say that thou art a king and keepest the city of Troy. Come hither, and I will make thee the saviour of their city to men hard pressed : lest ever Enyo^b of grievous wrath weigh heavily upon thee. Hearken to me and I will teach thee war and prowess.”

So cried Athena of many counsels, and white-armed Hera thus took up the tale :

“ If thou wilt elect me and bestow on me the fruit of the fairer, I will make thee lord of all mine Asia. Scorn thou the works of battle. What has a king to do with war ? A prince gives command both to the valiant and to the unwarlike. Not always are the squires of Athena foremost. Swift is the doom and death of the servants of Enyo ! ”

Such lordship did Hera, who hath the foremost throne, offer to bestow. But Cypris lifted up her deep-bosomed robe and bared her breast to the air and had no shame. And lifting with her hands the honeyed girdle of the Loves she bared all her bosom and heeded not her breasts. And smilingly she thus spake to the herdsman :

“ Accept me and forget wars : take my beauty and leave the sceptre and the land of Asia. I know not the works of battle. What has Aphrodite to do with shields ? By beauty much more do women excel. In place of manly prowess I will give thee a lovely bride, and, instead of kingship, enter thou the bed of Helen. Lacedaemon, after Troy, shall see thee a bridegroom."

Not yet had she ceased speaking and he gave her the splendid apple, beauty's offering, the great treasure of Aphrogeneia,^a a plant of war, of war an evil seed. And she, holding the apple in her hand, uttered her voice and spake in mockery of Hera and manly Athena :

"Yield to me, accustomed as ye be to war, yield me the victory. Beauty have I loved and beauty follows me. They say that thou, mother of Ares, didst with travail bear the holy choir of the fair-tressed Graces.^b But to-day they have all denied thee and not one hast thou found to help thee. Queen but not of shields and nurse but not of fire, Ares hath not holpen thee, though Ares rages with the spear : the flames of Hephaestus have not holpen thee, though he brings to birth the breath of fire. And how vain is thy vaunting, Atrytone^c ! whom marriage sowed not nor mother bare, but cleaving of iron and root of iron made thee spring without bed of birth from the head of thy sire. And how, covering thy body in brazen robes, thou dost flee from love and pursuest the works of Ares, untaught of harmony and wotting not of concord. Knowest thou not that such Athenas as thou are the more unvaliant — exulting in glorious wars, with limbs at feud, neither men nor women ?"^d

Thus spake Cypris and mocked Athena. So she got the prize of beauty that should work the ruin of her birth had swallowed her mother Metis) when it was cleft by the axe of Hephaestus or Prometheus (Hes. Th. 924, Hom. H. 28, Pind. O. vii. 35, Apollod. i. 3. 6).

On the same day he willed and on the same made the ships: ships which Athena^c neither planned nor wrought.

And now he had just left the hills of Ida for the deep, and, after with many a sacrifice upon the shore he had besought the favour of Aphrodite that attended him to aid his marriage, he was sailing the Hellespont over the broad back of the sea, when to him there appeared a token of his laborious toils. The dark sea leapt aloft and girdled the heaven with a chain of dusky coils and straightway poured forth rain from the murky air, and the sea was turmoiled as the oarsmen rowed. THE RAPE OF HELEN nine-circled course of her wandering path, where thou didst range and cry, Phyllis, waiting the safe return of thy husband Demophoon, when he should come back from the land of Athena. Then across the rich land of the Haemonians^a there suddenly arose upon his eyes the flowery Achaean land, Phthia, feeder of men, and Mycene of wide streets. Then past the marshes where Erymanthus^b rises he marked Sparta of fair women, the dear city of the son of Atreus, lying on the banks of the Eurotas. And hard by, established under a hill's shady wood, he gazed upon her neighbour, lovely Therapne. Thence they had not far to sail, nor was the noise of the oars rowing in the calm sea heard for long, when they cast the hawsers of the ship upon the shores of a fair gulf and made them fast, even they whose business was the works of the sea.

And he washed him in the snowy river and went his way, stepping with careful steps, lest his lovely feet should be defiled of the dust; lest, if he hastened more quickly, the winds should blow heavily on his helmet and stir up the locks of his hair.

And now he scanned the high-built houses of the hospitable inhabitants and the neighbouring temples hard by, and surveyed the splendour of the city; here gazing on the golden image of native^c Athena herself, and there passing the dear treasure of Carneian Apollo, even the shrine of Hyacinthus of Amyclae, whom once while he played as a boy with Apollo the people of Amyclae marked and marvelled whether he too had not been conceived and borne by Leto to Zeus. But Apollo knew not that he was keeping the youth for envious Zephyrus. And the earth, doing a pleasure to the weeping king, brought forth a flower to console Apollo, even that flower^a which bears the name of the splendid youth.

And at last by the halls of the son^b of Atreus, builded near, he stood, glorying in his marvellous graces. Not so fair was the lovely son^c whom Thyone^d bare to Zeus: forgive me, Dionysus! even if thou art of the seed of Zeus, he, too, was fair as his face was beautiful. And Helen unbarred the bolts of her hospitable bower and suddenly went to the court of the house, and, looking in front of the goodly doors, soon as she saw, so soon she called him and led him within the house, and bade him sit on a new-wrought chair of silver. And she could not satisfy her eyes with gazing, now deeming that she looked on the golden youth that attends on Cythereia^e—and late she recognized that it was not Eros; she saw no quiver of arrows—and often in the beauty of his face and eyes she looked to see the king^f of the vine: but no blooming fruit of the vine did she behold spread upon the meeting of his gracious brows. And after long time, amazed, she uttered her voice and said:

a glorious king, but thy family I know not among the Argives. I know all the family of blameless Deucalion. Not in sandy Pylus, the land of Neleus, hast thou thy dwelling: Antilochus I know, but thy face I have not seen; not in gracious Phthia, nurse of chieftains; I know the whole renowned race of the sons of Aeacus, the beauty of Peleus, the fair fame of Telamon, the gentleness of Patroclus and the prowess of Achilles."

So, yearning for Paris, spake the lady of sweet voice. And he opened honeyed speech and answered her:

"If haply thou hast heard of a town in the bounds of Phrygia, even Ilios, whereof Poseidon built the towers and Apollo: if thou hast haply heard of a very wealthy king in Troy, sprung from the fruitful race of Cronus: thence am I a prince and pursue all the works of my race. I, lady, am the dear son of Priam rich in gold, of the lineage of Dardanus am I, and Dardanus was the son of Zeus. And the gods from Olympus, companioning with men, oft-times became his servants,^a albeit they were immortal: of whom Poseidon with Apollo built the shining walls of our fatherland. And I, O Queen, am the judge of goddesses. For, deciding a suit for the aggrieved daughters of heaven, I praised the beauty of Cypris and her lovely form. And she vowed that she would give me a worthy recompense of my labour, even a glorious and a lovely bride, whom they call Helen, sister of Aphrodite; and it is for her sake that I have endured to cross such seas. Come, let us join wedlock, since Cythereia bids. Despise me not, put not my love to shame. I will not say--why should

I tell thee who knowest so much? for thou knowest that Menelaus is of an unvaliant race. Not such as thou are women born among the Argives; for they wax with meaner limbs and have the look of men and are but bastard women.”^a

So he spake. And the lady fixed her lovely eyes upon the ground, and long time perplexed replied not. But at last amazed she uttered her voice and said:

“ Of a surety, O stranger, did Poseidon and Apollo in days of old build the foundation of thy fatherland? Fain would I have seen those cunning works of the immortals and the shrill-blowning pasture of shepherd Apollo, where by the god-built vestibules of the gates Apollo often-times followed the kine of shuffling gait. Come now, carry me from Sparta unto Troy. I will follow, as Cythereia, queen of wedlock, bids. I do not fear Menelaus, when Troy shall have known me.”

So the fair-ankled lady plighted her troth. And night, respite from labour after the journey of the sun, lightened sleep and brought the beginning of wandering morn; and opened the two gates^b of dreams: one the gate of truth—it shone with the sheen of horn — whence leap forth the unerring messages of the gods; the other the gate of deceit, nurse of empty dreams. And he carried Helen from the bowers of hospitable Menelaus to the benches of his sea-faring ships; and exulting exceedingly in the promise of Cythereia he hastened to carry to Ilios his freight of war.

And Hermione^c cast to the winds her veil and, as morning rose, wailed with many tears. And often “ Sorrowing child, stay thy lamentation ; thy mother has gone, yet shall she come back again. While still thou weepest, thou shalt see her. Seest not ? thine eyes are blinded with tears and thy blooming cheeks are marred with much weeping. Haply she hath gone to a meeting of women in assembly and, wandering from the straight path, stands distressed, or she hath gone to the meadow and sits on the dewy plain of the Hours, or she hath gone to wash her body in the river of her fathers and lingered by the streams of Eurotas.”

Then spake the sorrowful maiden weeping : “ She knows the hill, she hath skill of the rivers' flow, she knows the paths to the roses, to the meadow. What say ye to me, women ? The stars sleep and she rests among the rocks ; the stars rise, and she comes not home. My mother, where art thou ? in what hills dost thou dwell ? not blame. Have the smooth waters covered thee in the depths, swimming in the wet streams of murmuring Eurotas? but even in the rivers and in the depths of the sea the Naiads live and do not slay women."

Thus she wailed, and leaning back her neck breathed Sleep who walks with Death; for verily it was ordained that both should have all things in common and pursue the works of the elder brother:^a hence women, weighed down with sorrowing eyes, oft-times, while they weep, fall asleep. And wandering amid the deceits of dreams she fancied that she saw her mother; and, amazed, the maiden, in her grief cried out:

"Yesterday to my sorrow thou didst fly from me out of the house and left me sleeping on my father's bed. What mountain have I left alone? What hill have I neglected? Followest thou thus the love of fair-tressed Aphrodite?

Then the daughter of Tyndareus^b spake to her and said:

"My sorrowful child, blaine me not, who have suffered terrible things. The deceitful man who came yesterday hath carried me away!"

So she spake. And the maiden leapt up, and seeing not her mother, uttered a yet more piercing cry and wailed:

"Birds, winged children of the brood of air, go ye to Crete and say to Menelaus: 'Yesterday a lawless man came to Sparta and hath laid waste all the glory of thy halls!'"

So spake she with many tears to the air, and seeking for her mother wandered in vain. And to the towns of the Cicones^c and the straits of

INTRODUCTION

I. THE LIFE OF TRYPHIODORUS

FOR the life of Tryphiodorus we have a notice in Suidas s.v. Τρυφιόδωρος “of Egypt, grammarian and epic poet; wrote Marathoniaca, Capture of Ilion (‘Ιλίου ἀλωσις), The Story of Hippodameia (τὰ καθ’ Ἰπποδάμειαν), an Odyssey leipogrammatos—this being a poem on the labours (κάματοι) of Odysseus and myths concerning him and other things.”

A second entry in Suidas under the name of Tryphiodorus merely says that he “wrote various things in epic verse; a paraphrase of the similes (παραβολαι) of Homer; and very many other things.”

As to the nature of the lipogrammatic Odyssey we have two notes :

(1) Suidas s.v. Νέστωρ of Laranda in Lycia, epic poet; . . . ‘Ιλιάδα γράψας λειπογράμματον ἦται ἀστοχείωτον; in similar fashion Tryphiodorus wrote an Odyssey; for in the First Book (α') the letter α is not found; and so in each rhapsody its (denoting) letter is wanting.”

(2) Eustathius, Hom. Od. prooem. 1379, in referring to freak variations on Homer mentions that one Timolaos “of Larissa or Macedon or both,” wrote a Troica, which he composed by inserting a line of his own alternately with a line of Homer’s Iliad (παρενέβαλε τῇ Ἰλιάδι στίχον πρὸς στίχον), and he goes on say: “it is said that Tryphiodorus wrote an Ὀδύσσεια λειπογράμματος, from which he banished sigma.”

Similarly we are told by Suidas s.v. Ἰδαιος Ρόδιος that Idaios παρεμβαλὼν στίχον στίχῳ ἐδιπλασε τὴν ποίησιν Ὁμήρου, and s.v. Πίγρης that Pigres of Halicarnassus, brother of the famous Artemisia, τῇ Ἰλιάδι παρενέβαλε κατὰ στίχον ἐλεγεῖσον, οὕτω γράψας· Μῆνιν δειδε, θεά, Πηληγάδεω Ἀχιλῆος, Μοῦσα, σὺ γὰρ πάσης πειρατ' ἔχεις σοφίης. Cf. K. Lehrs, Kleine Schriften, p. 2, who mentions that Joshua Barnes published at London in 1679 a Greek poem entitled Susias, containing the story of Esther in hexameters “presse ad Iliadis exemplar factis,” thus : Μῆνιν δειδε, θεά, Ἀμαληχιάδεω Ἀμανῆος | οὐλομένην, ἡ μυρὶ Ἐβραιοῖς ἀλγε' έθηκε | Περσέων δ' ἱφθίμους κεφαλὰς Ἄϊδι προΐαψεν. See Sandys, H.C.S. ii. p. 357 f. for this and Bentley's verdict that “Barnes had as much Greek, and understood it about as well, as an Athenian blacksmith.”

The above is the sum of our meagre information about Tryphiodorus. For the rest it is inferred from the fact that Tryphiodorus imitates Nonnus (circ. A.D. 400?), and is himself imitated by Colluthus, that he lived about the middle of the 5th century.

It has been inferred that he was a Christian on the very insufficient ground that in v. 604 f. he uses the phrase καὶ οὐ νοέοντα τοκήων ἀμπλακίας ἀπέτινον. But there is nothing specifically Christian about this language.

From the occurrence of the name of the Egyptian goddess Triphis or Thriphis only in a couple of inscriptions (one of the time of Tiberius, the other of the time of Trajan) from the district Athribis it has been argued by Letronne that he belonged to that district and that the correct spelling of his name is Triphiodorus.

II. THE MSS.

1. The best ms. is F = Laurentianus xxxii. 16, written in A.D. 1280, which once belonged to Franciscus Philelfus who bought it in Constantinople on 4th January A.D. 1423 from the wife of Johannes Chrysoloras. It contains, among other things, Nonni Dionysiaca, Apollonius Rhodius, Theocritus, Hesiod, Oppian, Moschus, Nicander, Tryphiodorus, Gregorius Nazianzenus.

“The wooden horse built by Epeius with help of Athena; Eur. Tr. 534 calls it the “polished ambush of the Argives,” ξεστὸν λόχον Ἀργείων.

• Patroclus.

THE TAKING OF ILIOS

THE long delayed end of the laborious war and the ambush, even the horse^a fashioned of Argive Athena, straightway to me in my haste do thou tell, O Calliopeia, remitting copious speech; and the ancient strife of men, in that war now decided, do thou resolve with speedy song.

Already the tenth year was rolling on and old had grown the strain of war, insatiate of blood, for Trojans and Danaans. With slaying of men the spears were weary, the menace of the swords died, quenched was the din of breastplate, rent and perishing the coiled fabric of shield-carrying baldricks; the shield endured no more to abide the hurtling of javelins, unstrung was the bent bow, the swift arrows decayed. And the horses—some apart at the idle manger, with heads bowed piteously, bewailed their fellow horses, some mourned to miss their perished charioteers.

Low lay the son of Peleus and with him his comrade^b dead: over his young son Antilochus old Nestor mourned: Aias with self-dealt wound had unstrung his mighty form, and bathed his foeman's sword^c in the rain of frenzied blood. The Trojans,

^a Iliad xvi. 490. Patroclus slays Sarpedon, son of Zeus and Laodamia (Il. vi. 198 f.). Zeus caused a miraculous darkness to fall upon the battle (Il. xvi. 567), the body of Sarpedon was taken up by Apollo and attended by Sleep and Death to Lycia (ibid. 676 ff.).

^b Iliad x. 435 ff. Rhesus was killed in his sleep by Odysseus and Diomedes.

^c Memnon, son of Tithonus and Eos (Dawn), is unknown to the Iliad: in Od. iv. 188 he is mentioned as slayer of Antilochus and xi. 522 as the most beautiful of those who fought at Troy. His death at the hands of Achilles was lamenting over the shameful dragging of Hector, had not only their domestic pain, but groaning for the woes of men of alien speech they wept in turn for their many-tongued allies. The Lycians wept for Sarpedon^a whom his mother, glorying in the bed of Zeus, had sent to Troy; howbeit he fell by the spear of Patroclus, son of Menoetius, and there was shed about him by his sire a mist that wept tears of blood. The Thracians wailed for Rhesus^b that in the guileful night was fettered by an evil sleep. And for the fate of Memnon^c Eos, his mother, hung aloft a cloud in heaven and stole away the light of shamefast day. The women from Thermodon^d dear to Ares, beating the unripe, unsucked circle of their breasts, mourned the warlike maiden Penthesileia, who came unto the dance of war, that war of many guests, and with her woman's hand scattered the cloud of men back to their ships beside the sea; only Achilles withstood her with his ashen spear and slew and despoiled her and gave her funeral.

And still all Ilios stood, by reason of her god-built towers, established upon unshaken foundations, and at the tedious delay the people of the Achaeans chafed.

told in the Aethiopis of Arctinus, and is described in Qu. Smyrnaeus ii. 542 f., as also the miraculous darkness which enabled his friends to recover his body, 550 f.

^a The Amazons, a race of warrior women, whose chief home was Themiscyra on the Thermodon in Pontus. They were reputed to mutilate one or both breasts to enable them better to draw the bow and throw the spear; hence they got their name (a + μαζός) "without breasts." (Here Tryph. seems to take the word to mean "not giving suck." Philostr. Her. xx. 42 makes it "unsuckled.") They were in art represented usually with right breast bare. Their queen Penthesileia was slain at Troy by Achilles, who was smitten with love for her as she died and gave her honourable burial.

^a Helenus, son of Priam and Hecuba, had the gift of prophecy. After the death of Paris he and Deiphobus, his brother, were rivals for the hand of Helen. Deiphobus being preferred, Helenus retired to Ida, where he was by the advice of Calchas seized and brought to the Greek camp. He advised the Greeks to build the wooden horse and to carry off the Palladium.

^b Neoptolemus, son of Achilles, by Deidamia, daughter of Lycomedes, king of Scyros. His original name was Pyrrhus, and he was called Neoptolemus because he went to war when young, or because his father did so (Paus. x. 26. 4). Helenus prophesied that Troy would not be taken without Neoptolemus and the arrows of Heracles—then in the

And now Athena, unwearying though she be, would have shrunk from her latest labour and all her sweat had been in vain, had not the seer^a turned from the bride-stealing lust of Deiphobus and come from Ilios as guest of the Danaans, and, as doing a favour to Menelaus in his travail, prophesied the late-fulfilled ruin of his own fatherland. And at the prophesying of jealous Helenus they straightway prepared an end of their long toil. From Scyros, too, leaving that city of fair maidens, came the son^b of Achilles and august Deidameia; who, albeit he mantled not yet on his goodly temples the down of manhood, showed the prowess of his sire, young warrior though he was. Came, too, Athena to the Danaans with her holy image^c; the prey of war but a helper to her friends.

Now, too, by the counsel of the goddess her servant Epeius^d wrought the image that was the foe of Troy, even the giant horse. And wood was cut and came down to the plain from Ida, even Ida whence formerly Phereclus built the ships for Alexander^e that were the beginning of woe. Fitted to broadest sides he made its hollow belly, in size as a curved ship which the carpenter turns true to the possession of Philoctetes. So Neoptolemus was brought from Scyrus by Odysseus alone, or with Phoenix (Soph. Ph. 343, cf. Philostr. Imag. ii.), or with Diomedes (Quint. Smyrn. vii. 169 ff.).

^e The Palladium, the ancient image of Athena, said to have been given by Zeus to Dardanus, on the possession of which the safety of Troy depended. It was stolen by Odysseus and Diomedes.

^a Epeius, son of Panopeus, built the Wooden Horse by means of which Troy was taken. Od. viii. 493, xi. 523, Verg. A. ii. 264.

In two circles he set the gem-like eyes of sea-green beryl and blood-red amethyst: and in the mingling of them a double colour flashed; the eyes were red and ringed with the green gems. In the jaws he set white rows of jagged teeth, eager to champ the ends of the well-twisted bit. And he opened secret paths in the mighty mouth to preserve the tide of breath for the men in hiding, and through the nostrils flowed the life-giving air. Ears were fixed on the top of its temples, pricked up, ever ready to await the sound of the trumpet. And back and flanks he fitted together and supple backbone, and joined hip-joint to smooth hip. Unto the heels of the feet trailed the flowing tail, even as vine weighed down with twisted tassels. So the horse flashed with terror and great beauty, wide and high ; not even Ares, lord of horses,^a would have refused to drive it, had he found it alive. And a great wall was driven about it, lest any of the Achaeans should behold it beforehand and fire the snare revealed. And beside the ship of Agamemnon from Mycenae the kings of the Achaeans gathered to council, avoiding the din and tumult of the stirring hosts. Then impetuous Athena took the likeness of a clear-voiced herald and stood by Odysseus to counsel him, daubing a man's voice with honeyed nectar. And, revolving his mind in godlike counsels, at first he stood like a man of empty wits^b fixing on the ground the gaze of his unturning eye ; but suddenly he opened his lips and delivered him of overflowing speech and thundered terribly, and poured, as from an airy spring, a great torrent of honey-dropping snow.

"O friends, now is the secret ambush prepared, by human hands but by the counsels of Athena. Do ye which have most trust in the might of your hands, heartily follow me with valiant mind and enduring soul ; for it is not seemly that we should

* When the Greek expedition against Troy lay at Aulis, as the Greeks were sacrificing, a snake came from under the altar and ascended a plane-tree overhead where was a sparrow with eight young ones. The snake devoured them all. Calchas, son of Thestor, the seer of the Greeks, prophesied that the war would last for nine years and that Troy would be taken in the tenth. (Hom. Iliad. ii. 308 ff.; Qu. Smyrn. vi. 61, viii. 475; Ov. Metamorphoses. xii. 11 ff.)

abide here a long time labouring and growing old without accomplishment or profit. Rather should we, while yet we live, do some deed worthy to be sung, or by bloody death escape the shameful reproach of cowardice. We have better comfort than they—if ye have not forgotten the sparrow^a and the ancient serpent and the fair plane-tree and the mother devoured with her swiftly perishing young, and her tender nestlings.

“And if old Calchas in his soothsaying deferred the day of fulfilment, yet even so the prophecies of Helenus,^b the alien seer, call us to a right speedy victory. Therefore hearken ye to me and let us hasten with good courage into the belly of the horse, that the Trojans may lead up into Ilios the guileful craft of the dauntless goddess, a self-taken woe, embracing their own doom.^c

“And do ye others loose the stern cables of the ships and yourselves cast fire upon the plaited tents, and leaving desolate the shore of the land of Ilios, sail ye all together on your pretended homeward way, until the hour that to you, gathered on the neighbouring beach, a beacon at eventide, stretched from a fair-anchoring place of outlook, shall give the signal to sail back again. And then let there be no hesitation of hurrying oarsmen nor other cloud of fear, such as the nights bring to men to terrify the mobile soul. But let each clan respect its former valour, and let no man put to shame his fame, so that each may win a recompense for chivalry worthy of his toils."

So he spake, leading them in counsel. And first godlike Neoptolemus followed his advising, even as a colt hastening over the dewy plain, which glories in his trappings of new harness and outruns both the lash and the threat of his driver. And after Neoptolemus rose up Diomedes, the son of Tydeus, marvelling for that even such aforetime was Achilles.^a Followed also Cyanippus, whom Comaetho, daughter of a goodly sire, even Tydeus, in brief wedlock bare to shield-bearing Aegialeus^b whose doom was swift. Rose, too, Menelaus; he was driven by a fierce impulse to strife with Deiphobus, and his stern heart boiled with eagerness to find him who a second time stole away his bride. After him rose Locrian Aias, the swift son of Oileus, still prudent of mind and not filled with lawless passion for women.^c And he roused up another, even Idomeneus, the grizzled king of the Cretans. And with these went the son of Nestor, strong Thrasymedes, and Teucer went, the archer son of Telamon. After them rose up the son of Admetus, even Eumelus of many horses. And after him hasted the seer Calchas, well knowing that accomplishing their difficult labour the Achaeans should now at last ride down the city of Troy. Nor remained behind, turning from the fray, Eurypylus, son of Euaemon, and goodly Leonteus, and Demophoon and Acamas, the two sons of Theseus, and Anticlus, son of Ortyx—who died there and the Achaeans wept for him and buried only one of the Epigoni who was killed at Thebes (Pind. P. viii. 60 f.; Paus. ix. 5. 7).

him in the horse; and Peneleus and Meges and valiant Antiphates, and Iphidamas and Eurydamas, offspring of Pelias, and Amphidamas armed with a bow. Last Epeius of glorious craft set foot in the thing he had himself contrived.

Then they prayed unto the grey-eyed daughter of Zeus and hasted into their vessel of the horse. And Athena mixed ambrosia and brought them the food of the gods to eat, that in their ambush all day long they might not be afflicted and their knees weighed down by unpleasant hunger. And as when with the frosts of the storm-footed clouds the snow freezes the air and besprinkles the fields and melting sends forth a great stream; and the wild beasts, cowering from the din of the mountain-eradled river, as it leaps swiftly down from a rock in headlong tumult, withdraw beneath the shelter of their hollow lair and abide there silently with shivering flanks, and, bitterly anhungered, by grievous constraint patiently await the ceasing of the rain: even so the unwearied Achaeans leapt through the carven wood and supported travail beyond enduring. And for them Odysseus, the faithful warder of the unguessed snare, closed the door of the pregnant horse, and sat himself in the head as scout; and both his yearning eyes escaped the notice of those without. And the son of Atreus bade the Achaean servants undo with well-bent mattocks the fence of stone wherewith the horse was hidden. He wished to let it be uncovered that, shining afar, it might send the message of its beauty unto all men. And at the bidding of their king they dug it up.

But when the sun, drawing on shadowy night for men, turned far-shooting dawn to the dusky-

^a Sinon (short form for Sinopos, Maass, Hermes xxiii. (1888)) son of Aesimus, who, as son of Autolycus and Amphithea, is brother of Anticleia, mother of Odysseus, was left behind when the Greeks sailed to Tenedos, in order that he might light a beacon as a signal for them to return, and that he might induce the Trojans to drag the wooden horse within the walls. There is some variation in the accounts of Sinon's performance, cf. Apollodor. Epitom. v. 14 ff.; Verg. A. ii. 57 ff.; Qu. Smyrn. xii. 243 ff.; Lycophr. 340 ff. who connects the business with the treason of Antenor.

footed setting, then spread abroad the voice of the heralds, telling the people to flee and launch in the hollow sea their fair-peaked ships and loose the cables. Then raising the rush of pinewood fire and burning the fences of their well-established tents they sailed away in their ships from the Rhoeteian shore to a haven over the sea in fair-crowned Tenedos, ploughing the grey waters of Helle, daughter of Athamas. Only Sinon^a remained behind, the son of Aesimus, his limbs voluntarily scarred with stripes, a deceitful hero, concealing a hidden snare and sorrow for the Trojans. And even as when hunter men cast a net about the stakes and set a meshed ambush for the wild beasts that roam the hills, and one chosen apart from the others secretly creeps beneath the thick branches, a hidden scout of the hunt to watch the nets^b: even so, his marred limbs marked about with stripes, he devised grievous destruction for Troy; and the streaming blood flowed over his shoulders from wounds purposely made. All night long the flame raged about the tents, belching forth smoke that curled in wandering eddy, and loud-roaring Hephaestus urged it on. Yea, and Hera herself, that gives light to men,^c the mother of immortal fire, breathed thereon and stirred up all manner of gusts. And now in the shadowy dawn there came to Trojans and to the women of Ilios a rumour spoken by many tongues, announcing the flight of the foe by signal of smoke. Straightway they flung open the bars of the gates and rushed forth, foot and horse, and poured into the plain, seeking whether this were some fresh guile of the Danaans. And yoking swift mules to wagons there came down from the city with King Priam the other elders of the people; and most light of heart were they, being comforted for their children whom bloody Ares had spared, and boding of an old age of freedom: but not long were they to rejoice, since the counsel of Zeus willed it so. And when they saw the flashing form of the skilfully fashioned horse, they thronged about it marvelling, even as chattering jackdaws scream about when they see the valiant eagle. And confused^a and uncertain counsel fell among them. Some wearied with dolorous war and hating the horse, because it was the work of the Achaeans, wished either to dash it on the long precipices or to break it up with two-edged hatchets. But others, trusting in the new polished work of art, bade dedicate the warlike horse to the immortals, to be in after days a memorial of the Argive war. And as they debated, there appeared unto them, dragging his motley limbs over the plain, a naked man in sorry case.^b

^a The λινόπτης was the person who watched the nets to see what entered them. Pollux v. 17, Hesych. s.v. λινόπτης; cf. Aristoph. Peace 1178 ἐγὼ δ' ἔστηκα λινοπτώμενος and schol. there.

^c Hera as "bringer of light" is attested by the fact that Phosphorus (the Morning Star or Venus) was sometimes regarded as the star of Hera: Aristot. De mundo 2 ὁ τοῦ Φωσφόρου δν 'Αφροδίτης, οἱ δὲ "Ἡρας προσαγορεύονται. Pliny, N.H. ii. 37 speaking of the "sidus appellatum Veneris" says "in magno nominum ambitu est. Alii enim Iunonis, alii Isidis, alii Matris Deum appellavere."

Smyrn. xii. 360 ff. he is found by the Trojans beside the wooden horse and only speaks after torture, when his nose and ears have been cut off.

^a Philoctetes, son of Poeas, king of Malis, having on the voyage to Troy been bitten by a water snake and his wound having become noisome, was left by the Greeks in Lemnos. Afterwards they learned that Troy could not be taken without Philoctetes and the arrows which he had received from Heracles. So he was brought to Troy by Odysseus, and his wound being healed by Machaon he slew Paris.

THE TAKING OF ILIOS

His weals laden with unseemly blood showed the ruinous track of the swift lash. Straightway he grovelled before the feet of Priam, and touched his ancient knees with suppliant hands ; and entreating the old man he uttered his craftily woven tale :

“Sceptred King, son of Dardanus, behold me the fellow voyager of the Argives, if thou pitiest me, and deliverer of the Trojans and their city, if thou wilt save me, and lastly foe of the Achaeans : behold how they evilly entreated me who had done no wrong, heeding not the regard of the gods, evil and unkind always. Even so they snatched away his reward from Achilles, son of Peleus, and even so they left Philoctetes,^a fettered by the bite of the water snake, and slew in wrath Palamedes^b himself. And behold now what they have done to me in their wicked folly, for that I would not flee with them, but bade my comrades stay. Overcome by frenzied foolishness they stripped me of my raiment and wounded all my body with unseemly stripes and left me on an alien shore. But, blessed one, do thou have regard unto the majesty of Zeus, the god of suppliants. For I shall be a joy to the Argives, if thou lettest a suppliant and a stranger perish at the hands of the Trojans. But I shall be surety unto all of you that ye no more dread returning war of the Achaeans.”

So he spake, and the old man comforted him with gentle voice : “Stranger, it befits thee not to be afraid any more since thou hast mingled with the

^a Palamedes, son of Nauplius, king of Euboea, exposed the ruse by which Odysseus tried to avoid the expedition to Troy. In revenge Odysseus contrived to bury a quantity of gold in the tent of Palamedes and forged a letter from Priam offering bribes for the betrayal of the Greek army. Palamedes was found guilty of treason and stoned to death.

Trojans ; for thou hast escaped the unkindly violence of the Achaeans. Evermore thou shalt be our friend nor shall sweet desire seize thee for thy fatherland or for thy halls of many possessions. But come, declare thou to me what marvel is this, the horse, a portent of unappeasable terror. And declare thy name and lineage and whence the ships brought thee."

Then the hero of many devices took heart and said : "These things also will I declare ; thou biddest me who am myself willing. Argos is my city and the name given to me is Sinon, and my grey-haired sire they call Aesimus ; and the famous horse was invented for the Argives by Epeius. If you allow it to abide here in its place, it is decreed that the spear of the Achaeans shall capture Troy ; but if Athena receive it a holy offering in her shrine, then they shall flee away with their task unaccomplished. But come, cast it about with entwining chains and draw to the great acropolis the horse of golden reins, and Athena, guardian of the city, be our guide, eager to win the carven offering, even she ! "

So he spake, and the king bade him take and do on a cloak and a tunic.^a And they bound the horse with chains of oxhide and drew it with well-plaited ropes over the plain, mounted on its swift wheels and filled with chieftains ; and before it flutes and lyres made shrill minstrelsy together. Wretched generation of heedless mortals ! for whom a mist which they cannot pierce enwraps the future. By reason of empty joy many men many times stumble unwittingly on destruction : even as at that time ruinous doom for the Trojans rioted on its own way into the city, and none knew that it was fierce sorrow unforgettable that they drew. And gathering flowers from the dewy river they wreathed the tresses on the neck of their slayer. The earth torn about the brazen wheels moaned terribly, and the axles of iron, grinding in them, groaned with harsh noise. The joining of knit ropes creaked and all the taut coiling chain sent up a fiery smoke.^a And as they haled, loud rose the din and the vaunting. Groaned shady Ida together with her nymph-haunted oaks: the eddying waters of the river Xanthus shrieked, and the mouth of Simois rang aloud: and in the heaven the trumpet of Zeus prophesied of the war they drew. But they haled forward; and the long way waxed heavy, torn with rivers and not like plain lands. And the flashing horse followed them unto the altars dear to Ares, glorying exceedingly; and Athena set her might thereto, laying her heavy hands on the newly carven thighs of the horse. So it sped beyond overtaking, and ran on swifter than an arrow, following the Trojans with lightly prancing feet, until it reached the Dardan gates. And for its coming the folding doors were straitened. But Hera set it free once more to run its course, withdrawing the doors before it, while from the towers Poseidon with his trident drove back the posts of the opening gates. And the Trojan women throughout the city, some here, some there, brides and maidens unwed^b and mothers experienced of Eileithyia^c circled about the image with song and dance.

* The γέρανος, or crane-dance, is described by Pollux iv. 101, "The crane-dance they danced in a body, one behind the other in line, the extremities being occupied by the leaders, Theseus and his party having first imitated so, round the altar in Delos, their escape from the labyrinth." Cf. Plutarch, Thes. 21, Lucian, De salt. 34. A similar dance called κανδιωτής is still danced in Greece. It seems likely

Others culling the fresh bounty of the rain strewed a rosy carpet for the wooden trail. Others undid the spun girdles of sea-purple about their breasts and with woven garlands wreathed the horse. Some broaching the seal of a great jar poured forth wine mixed with golden saffron and made the piled earth odorous with fragrant mud. With the shouting of men was mingled the cry of women, the huzza of boys was joined with the voice of age. And even as the denizens of rich Ocean, the attendants of winter, the ranks of the cranes^a crying in air, align the circle of their wandering dance, uttering their notes abhorred by the ploughmen who labour the earth: even so with crying and with tumult they led to the acropolis the horse laden within. And the god-driven daughter^b of Priam would not abide any more in her chamber. Tearing apart the bars she ran, like restless heifer whom the sting of the ox-tormenting gadfly has smitten and stung to frenzy: which looks no more to the herd nor obeys the herdsman nor yearns for the pasture, but whetted by the sharp dart she passes beyond the range of oxen: in such wise, her heart distraught by the pricking of the shafts of prophecy, the maiden shook the holy laurel wreath and cried everywhere throughout the city. She heeded nor parents nor friends, and maiden shame forsook her. Not so doth the pleasant flute of

Dionysus raging on the hills strike the Thracian woman^a amid the thickets: who, smitten by the god, strains a wild eye and shakes her naked head dark-garlanded with ivy. So Cassandra, starting from her winged wits, raged god-maddened; and, beating ever and again hair and breast, she cried with frenzied voice:

"O wretched men! why rage ye possessed, dragging this unfriendly horse, hastening to your last night and the end of war and the sleep that knows no waking? This warlike rout comes from the foemen. Surely now the travail of the dreams of poor Hecabe^b bears fruit. The long deferred year comes to an end with the resolving of the war. Such a company of chieftains comes, whom the mighty horse shall bring forth in the darkest night, flashing in their armour for battle; now shall warriors most perfect leap to earth and rush to the fray. For not women shall deliver the labouring steed in its travail and attend the birth of men, but she that wrought it shall herself be its Lady of Deliverance; Athena, sacker of cities, midwife of a dolorous birth, shall herself undo the pregnant belly and utter her cry. Lo! now there is rolled within the towers a purple sea of blood outpoured, a wave of death; about the hands of women, sharing the common doom, the bonds of bridal are twined: beneath the wooden planks lurks hidden fire. Alas! for my woes, alas! for thee, city of my fathers, soon shalt thou be fine dust: gone is the handiwork of the immortals, gone utterly the foundations of Laomedon. And she had borne a firebrand. The seers interpreted this to mean that her child would be fatal to Troy and advised that it should be put to death (Hyginus, Fab. 91 and 249; Apollod. iii. 12. 5; Eur. Troad. 922; Verg. Aen. vii. 320, etc.).

^a Hecabe was turned into a hound (Eur. Hec. 1259 ff.).

^b Polyxena, daughter of Priam and Hecabe, was loved by Achilles and after the capture of Troy was sacrificed by the Greeks at the tomb of Achilles (Epic. Gr. Frag. p. 50 Kinkel; Apollod. Epitom. v. 23). The name of Neoptolemus was given as the sacrificer by Stesichorus, Ibicus, and later by Euripides; cf. schol. Eur. Hec. 41.

for thee, my father,^a and for thee, my mother,^b I weep to think what manner of things ye both shall suffer. Thou, my father, piteously fallen shalt lie beside the altar of mighty Zeus of the Court.^c Mother of the best of children, thee from human shape the gods shall turn into a hound^d maddened over thy children. Fair Polyxena,^e for thee lying low near to thy fatherland I shall weep but little: would that someone of the Argives had slain me too with thy lamented fate! For what profit have I in life any more, if life but keep me for a most pitiful death, and an alien soil shall cover me? Such things for me and such a doom for King Agamemnon himself doth my mistress' weave, his reward for all his labours. But now take ye heed—in suffering shall ye learn the truth of my words—and put away, my friends, the cloud of infatuate folly. Let the body of the capacious horse be rent with hatchets or burnt with fire. And hiding crafty persons as it does, let it perish and be greatly regretted by the Danaans. And then feast ye and array you for the dance, setting up mixing-bowls in honour of dear liberty."^f

So she spake; but no one hearkened to her; for Apollo made her at once a good prophet and unbeliever.^g And her father spake and rebuked her:

^b Hom. Il. vi. 526, "if Zeus grant us to set up in our halls the mixing-bowl of liberty to the everlasting gods."

^c Cassandra, daughter of Priam, obtained from Apollo the gift of prophecy. But afterwards she refused to fulfil the promise by which she had obtained it. Apollo avenged himself by causing her prophecies not to be believed (Aesch. Ag. 1208 ff.).

"What spirit of ill name hath brought thee again, prophetess of evil, bold dog-fly? Vainly dost thou try to stay us with thy barking. Is thy mind not yet weary of its plague of madness, and hast thou not had thy fill of ill-omened ravings, but thou hast come in vexation at our mirth, when Zeus, the son of Cronus, hath lighted for us all the day of freedom and scattered the ships of the Achaeans? And no longer are the long spears brandished, no longer are the bows drawn, no longer flash the swords, the arrows are silent. But dances and honey-breathing music is ours and no more strife: no more wails the mother over the child, nor doth the wife send her husband to the fray and weep, a widow, over his corpse. Athena, guardian of the city, welcomes the horse which is drawn along. But thou, bold maiden, rushing before the house with false prophecies and wild raving, labourest to no purpose and pollutest the holy city. Go to! but our care is dance and mirth. For no longer is terror left under the walls of Troy, and no longer have we need of thy prophetic voice."

So he spake, and bade lead away the frenzied maiden, hiding her in her chamber. And hardly and against her will she obeyed her parent, and throwing herself upon her maiden bed she wept, knowing her own doom: already she beheld the fire raging on the walls of her burning fatherland. But the others at the temple of the goddess Athena, guardian of the city, set up the horse on well-polished pedestal, and burned fair offerings on savoury altars; but the immortals refused their vain hecatombs. And there was festival in the town and infinite lust, lust uplifting the drunkenness of wine that unmans. And all the city was filled with foolishness and gaped

^a Lit. “received the sting (goad) of Laodameia.” The ordinary and natural interpretation is that the wife of Anticlus was called Laodameia. She is otherwise unknown, and as the famous Laodameia, wife of Protesilaus, is the type of the love of husband and wife (“the wife of Protesilaus loved him even after death and made a likeness of him . . . and the gods pitied her and Hermes brought him back from

with heedlessness, and few warders watched the gates ; for now the light of day was sinking and fateful night wrapped steep Ilios for destruction. And Aphrodite of many counsels, putting on the likeness of hoary age, came to Argive Helen with crafty intent and called her forth and spake to her with persuasive voice :

“ Dear lady, thy valiant husband Menelaus calls thee. He is hidden in the wooden horse, and round him lie ambushed the leaders of the Achaeans, wooers of war in thy cause. But come and heed no longer ancient Priam nor the other Trojans nor Deiphobus himself. For now I give thee to much enduring Menelaus.”

So spake the goddess and ran away again. But Helen, her heart beguiled by the craft, left her fragrant chamber, and her husband Deiphobus followed her. And as she went, the Trojan women of trailing tunics gazed upon her. And when she came to the high-roofed temple of Athena, she stood and scanned the form of the well-manned horse. Three times she walked round it and provoked the Argives, naming all the fair-tressed wives of the Achaeans with her clear voice. And their hearts were torn within them with grief and they restrained their pent up tears in silence. Groaned Menelaus when he heard the daughter of Tyndareus : wept the son of Tydeus remembering Aegialeia : the name of Penelope stirred the heart of Odysseus : but only Anticlus, stung by the name of Laodameia,^a Hades. And when she beheld him and thought he had returned from Troy she rejoiced ; but when he was carried back to Hades she killed herself” Apollod. epit. iii. 30), it seems possible that the meaning here is “the goad that pricked Laodameia,” i.e. desire for the absent spouse.

opened his lips and essayed answering speech. But Odysseus leapt upon him and fell about him with both his hands and restrained him while he strove to open his lips, and, seizing his mouth in escapeless fetters unbreakable, held him masterfully. And he writhed under the pressure of his hands, essaying to escape the giant bonds of murderous silence. And breath that gives men life forsook him ; and the other Achaeans wept for him with secret tears and hid him away in the hollow flank of the horse, and cast a coverlet over his chilly limbs. And now would the crafty woman have beguiled another of the Achaeans, had not fierce-eyed Pallas met her from the sky and threatened her and led her forth from her dear temple, appearing unto her alone,^a and sent her away with stern voice :

“ Wretch, how far shall thy sinfulness carry thee and thy passion for alien wedlock and the infatuation of Cypris^b? And thou hast never any pity for thy former husband nor any yearning for thy daughter Hermione, but helpest still the Trojans ? Withdraw and go up into thy upper room in the house and with kindly fire welcome the ships of the Achaeans.”

So she spake and shattered the woman’s empty deceit. And Helen passed to her chamber, while they ceased from the dance, filled with weariness, and fell on sleep. The lyre rested, the weary flute lay beside the mixing-bowl, and many a cup fell from the drooping hand and flowed of itself. Peace, the companion of night, browsed about the city ; and no baying of dogs was heard but perfect silence reigned, inviting slaughter-breathing battle. And now Zeus,

The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
 Hung forth in Heaven his golden scales, etc.

• Here (1) both Sinon and Helen give the beacon, (2) Sinon gives it from the grave of Achilles. In Apollodorus, epitom. v. 19 only Sinon gives it and from the grave of Achilles, i.e. from outside the city. Arctinus, in the Iliu dispenser of war, weighed the Balance ^a of destruction for the Trojans, and hardly and at last rallied the Achaeans. Phoebus Apollo withdrew from Ilios to his rich shrine in Lycia, grieving over his mighty walls. And straightway beside the tomb of Achilles Sinon ^b showed his message to the Argives with his shining brand. And all night long fair Helen herself also displayed from her chamber to her friends her golden torch. And even as when the moon, full with grey fire, gilds with her face the gleaming heaven : not when, sharpening her pointed horns, she first shines, rising in the shadowless ^c dusk of the month, but when, orbing the rounded radiance of her eye, she draws to herself the reflected rays of the sun : even so did the lady of Therapne on that night in her radiance lift up her wine-hued arm, directing the friendly fire. And when they beheld the gleam of the beacon on high, the Argives speedily set back their ships on the path of return, and every mariner made haste, seeking to find an end of the long war. They were at once sailors and stout warriors and called each on the other to row. So the ships, swifter than the speedy winds, with obedient rush sailed unto Ilios by the help of persis (Procl. p. 244, Myth. Gr. i. Wagner) says Sinon gave the signal πρότερον εἰσεληλυθώς προσποιητός, i.e. apparently inside the city. In Vergil, A. vi. 517 ff. the signal is given by Helen. No signal is given by Sinon, but ib. 256 a signal is sent by the Greeks to Sinon who then opens the door of the horse. In Quint. Smyrn. xiii. 23 ff. Sinon gives the signal and ib. 30 ff. he also opens the door of the horse.

^c Aratus says (736) that the moon first casts a shadow when she “is going to the fourth day.” Fest. Avien. Progn. v. ff.

Poseidon. And there the foot soldiers went in front, while the horsemen fell behind, in order that the horses might not rouse the people of Troy by their loud neighing. And those others poured from the carven belly of the horse, armed princes, even as bees from an oak : which when they have laboured within the capacious hive, weaving the sweet honeycomb with cunning art, pour from their vaulted nest to the pasture and vex the passing wayfarers with their stings : even so the Danaans undid the bolts of their secret ambush and leapt upon the Trojans and, while they still slept, shrouded them in evil dreams of brazen death. The earth swam with blood, and a cry unceasing arose from the fleeing Trojans, and sacred Ilios was straitened with falling corpses, while those others with murderous tumult raged this way and that, like mad lions, bridging the streets with new-slain bodies. And the Trojan women heard from their roofs and some, still thirsting for beloved liberty, submitted their necks to their wretched husbands for slaughter : mothers over their dear children, like light swallows, made lament : and many a young bride wept for her young husband quivering in his death struggle and was fain to die herself, and willed not to follow in the chains of captivity, but roused to anger her unwilling slayer and won to share the death-bed that was owing to her spouse. And many who bare within them breathless children whose months were not yet fulfilled, shed untimely the travail of the womb and died a chilly death, themselves too, with their children. And Enyo,^a revelling in the drunkenness of unmixed blood, danced all night throughout the city, like a hurricane, turbulent with the waves of surging war. And therewithal Strife lifted her head high as heaven and stirred up the Argives; since even bloody Ares, late but even so, came and brought to the Danaans the changeful victory in war and his help that is now for these and anon for those. And on the acropolis grey-eyed Athena uttered her voice and shook her aegis, the shield of Zeus; and the sky trembled as Hera bestirred her, and the heavy earth rang as it was shaken by the three-toothed spear^a of Poseidon. And Hades shuddered and looked forth from his seat under earth, afraid lest in the great anger of Zeus Hermes, conductor of souls, should bring down all the race of men. And all things were confounded together and there was slaughter without discretion.^b For some in flight they slew standing by the Scaean^c gates: one leapt from his bed and, seeking his arms, fell upon a darkling spear; one hidden in his shadowy house invited as his guest one whom he deemed to be a friend: fool! no friendly man was he to meet but got hateful gifts of his hospitality; another over his roof, while yet he looked not, fell by the swift arrow. And some, their hearts weighed down with grievous wine, in terror at the din, hasting to come down, forgot the ladder^d and fell unwitting from the lofty roofs and luxed and brake the bones of their necks, and therewithal spewed forth wine. And many gathered together in one place were slain as they fought and many, as they were pursued, fell from the towers into the house of Hades, leaping their latest leap. And a few through a narrow hollow, like thieves, escaped unnoticed from the storm of their perishing fatherland. Others within, in the surge of war and darkness, like to men gone rather than to men fleeing, fell one above the other. And the city could not contain the filth, desolate of men but over-full of dead. And there was no sparing. Driven by the frenzied lash of sleepless turmoil they had no regard even to the gods, but with most lawless onset they defiled with blood the innocent altars of the immortals. And old men most piteous were slain in most unworthy slaughter: slain not on their feet, but, stretching on the ground their suppliant limbs, they had their grey heads laid low. And many infant children were snatched from the mother's breast that had suckled them but a little while and, understanding not, paid for the sins of their parents, while she that nursed it, offered the child the breast in vain, and brought offering of milk it might not suck.^a And birds and dogs, here and there throughout the city, the fowls of air and the beasts that walk the earth, feasted in company and drank the black blood and made a savage meal. The crying of the birds breathed slaughter, while the barking dogs bayed wildly over torn corpses of men, pitiless and heeding not that they were rending their own masters.

And Odysseus and Menelaus of the goodly hair set out for the house of woman-mad Deiphobus, like unto wolves of jagged teeth, which in a stormy night, lusting for blood, go to attack unshepherded flocks and waste the labour of the herdsmen. There, though they were but two, they engaged foemen beyond numbering. And a new battle arose, as these attacked and those from a chamber overhead hurled stones and arrows which bring speedy death. Yet even so, fencing their giant heads with helmets unbreakable and encircling themselves with shields, they leapt into the great house. And Odysseus drove and slaughtered the crowd that opposed him, even as wild beasts affrighted. And the son of Atreus on the other hand pursued Deiphobus who skulked away, and overtook and smote him in the midst of the belly and poured forth his liver and slippery guts. So he lay there and forgot his chivalry. And with Menelaus followed, trembling, his spear-won spouse, now rejoicing in the end of dire woes, and now ashamed, and then again, though late, as in a dream, secretly groaning, she remembered her dear fatherland. But Neoptolemus, scion of Aeacus, slew beside the altar of Zeus of the Court-yard the aged king out-worn with woe. He put from him such pity as his father had shown, and hearkened not to his prayers, nor had compassion when he looked on his hair grey even as the hair of Peleus: the hair at which of old Achilles softened his heart and, despite his grievous anger, spared the old man.^a Hard of heart! verily a like fate was destined afterward to come to him by the altar of truthful Apollo, when, as he sought to

^a There are several versions of the death of Neoptolemus at Delphi. (1) According to one story he came to plunder the temple of Apollo (Paus. x. 7. 1), and was slain at the instance of the Pythian priestess by the Delphians (Paus. i. 13. 9) or by Apollo's priest himself (Paus. x. 24. 4). (2) According to another version he came to offer to Apollo the first-fruits of the spoil of Troy, "and there in a quarrel over meats a man slew him with a knife" (Pindar, Nem. vii. 40 f.). After his death he was buried in the precincts of Apollo's temple, and yearly offerings were made to him as a hero by the Delphians (Paus. x. 24. 6).

^b The fate of Astyanax, son of Hector and Andromache, who was hurled headlong from the wall of Troy, is foreshadowed in Hom. Il. xxiv. 735.

harm the divine shrine, a Delphian man smote and slew him with a holy knife.^a

And Andromache bewailed short-lived Astyanax,^b whom she saw dive headlong from the airy towers, hurled to death by the hand of Odysseus. Swift Aias, son of Oileus, assaulted Cassandra when she took shelter at the knees of the stainless goddess Pallas; and the goddess rejected his violence, and, helper though she had been aforetime, for one man's sake Athena was angered against all the Argives. Aeneias and Anchises did Aphrodite steal away, taking pity on the old man and his son, and far from their fatherland established them in Ausonia.^c So the counsel of the gods was fulfilled with approval of Zeus, so that imperishable sovereignty should be the lot of the children and the grandchildren^d of Aphrodite dear to Ares. ^b Antenor and his wife Theano, sister of Hecabe, had entertained Odysseus and Menelaus when they came to Troy to ask the restoration of Helen before the war (Hom. Il. iii. 205), and subsequently he advised the surrender of Helen (Hom. Il. vii. 347 ff.). His friendly attitude to the Greeks ("Troianaes suasorem Antenora pacis," Ovid, F. iv. 75) led later to charges of treachery; cf. Lycophr. 340.

and neither Acamas, son of Theseus, nor any other of the Achaeans led thee captive, but thou didst perish with thy fatherland.

All the multitude of strife and the sorrows of that night I could not sing, distinguishing each event. This is the Muses' task ; and I shall drive, as it were a horse,^a a song which, wheeling about, grazes the turning-post.

Dawn in her car was just speeding back from Ocean in the East and marking great space of sky with slowly brightening light, dispelling slaughterous night ; and they, exulting in their proud victory in war, looked everywhere throughout the city to find if any others were concealed and avoiding the murderous warfare that embraced all the people. But they were overcome by the all-capturing net of death, as fishes poured forth on the shores of the sea. And the Argives carried from the halls their new bravery to deck their ships and many treasured heirlooms did they seize from the desolate chambers. And with them they carried off by force captive wives and children together unto the ships. And having arrayed city-sacking fire against the walls, in one flame they confounded all the works of Poseidon.^b And even there was smoking Ilios made a great monument to her dear citizens. And Xanthus, beholding the fiery doom of the city, wept with seaward flowing fountain of lamentation, and, terrified by the anger of Hera, yielded to Hephaestus.
